PREFACE.

IT is very surprizing that the Letters of Abelard and Heloise have not sooner appeared in Englisſh, since it is generally allow'd by all who have seen them in other Languages that they are written with the greateſt Paſſion of any in this kind which are Extant. And it is certain that the Letters from a Nun to a Cavalier, which have so long been known and admired among us, are in all reſpects inferior to them. Whatever thoſe were, theſe are known to be genuine Pieces, occaſioned by an Amour which had very extraordinary Conſequences, and made a great Noiſe at the Time when it happen'd, being between two of the moſt diſtinguiſh'd Perſons of that Age.

Theſe Letters therefore being truly written by the Perſons themſelves, whoſe Names they bear, and who were both remarkable for their Genius and Learning, as well as by a moſt extravagant Paſſion for each other, are every where full of Sentiments of the Heart, (which are not to be imitated in a feign'd Story) and Touches of Nature, much more moving than any which could flow from the Pen of a Writer of Novels, or enter into the Imagination of any one who had not felt the like Emotions and Diſtreſſes.

They were originally written in Latin, and are extant in a Collection of the Works of Abelard, printed at Paris in the Year 1616. With what Elegance and Beauty of Style they were written in

in that Language, will ſufficiently appear to the learned Reader, even by thoſe few Citations which are ſet at the Bottom of the Page in ſome Places of the following Hiſtory. But the Book here mention'd conſiſting chiefly of School Divinity, and of the Learning of thoſe Times, and therefore being rarely to be met with but in publick Libraries, and in the Hands of ſome learned Men, the Letters of Abelard and Heloiſe are much more known by a Tranſlation, or rather Paraphraſe of them in French, firſt publiſh'd at the Hague in 1693, and which afterwards received ſeveral other more compleat Editions. This Tranſlation is much applauded, but who was the Author of it is not certainly known. Monſieur Balye ſays, he had been inform'd it was done by a Woman; and perhaps he thought no one beſides could have enter'd ſo thoroughly into the Paſſion and Tenderneſs of ſuch Writings, for which that Sex ſeems to have have a more natural Disposition than the other. This may be judg'd by the Letters themselves, among which those of Heloise are the most Tender and Moving, and the Master seems in this Particular to have been excell'd by the Scholar.

In some of the later Editions in French, there has been prefix'd to the Letters an Historical Account of Abelard and Heloise; this is chiefly extracted from the Preface of the Editor of Abelard's Works in Latin, and from the Critical Dictionary of Monsieur Balye*, who has put together, under several Articles, all the Particulars he was able to Collect concerning these two famous Persons: And tho' the first Letter of Abelard to Philintus, in which he relates his own Story, may seem to have render'd this Account in part unneceſſary; yet the Reader will not be diſpleas'd to ſee the Thread of the Relation entire, and continued to the Death of the Perſons whoſe Misfortunes had made their Lives ſo very remarkable.

It is indeed impoſſible to be unmov'd at the ſurprizing and multiply'd Afflictions and Perſecutions which befel a Man of Abelard's fine Genius, when we ſee them ſo feelingly deſcrib'd by his own Hand. Many of theſe were owing to the Malice of ſuch as were his Enemies on the Account of his ſuperior Learning and Merit; yet the great Calamities of his Life took their Riſe from his unhappy Indulgence of a criminal Paſſion, and giving himſelf a Looſe to unwarrantable Pleaſures. After this he was perpetually involved in Sorrow and Diſtreſs, and in vain ſought for Eaſe and Quiet in a Monaſtick Life. The Letters between him and his beloved Heloiſe were not written 'till long after their Accordingly we find in them surprizing Mixtures of Devotion and Tenderness, of Penitence and remaining Frailty, and a lively Picture of Human Nature in its Contrarieties of Passion and Reason, its Infirmities and its Sufferings.*

Abelard and Heloiſe.

PETER ABELARD was born in the Village of Palais, in Britany. He liv'd in the twelfth Century, in the Reigns of Lewis the Groſs, and Lewis the Young. His Father's Name was Beranger, a Gentleman of a conſiderable and wealthy Family. He took Care to give his Children a liberal and pious Education; eſpecially his eldeſt Son Peter, on whom he endeavour'd to beſtow all poſſible Improvements, provements, becauſe there appear'd in him an extraordinary Vivacity of Wit, join'd with Sweetneſs of Temper, and all imaginable Preſages of a great Man.

WHEN he had made ſome Advancement in Learning, he grew ſo fond of his Books, that, leſt Affairs of the World might interrupt his Proficiency in them, he quitted his Birth-right to his younger Brothers, and applied himſelf entirely to the Studies of Philoſophy and Divinity.

OF all the Sciences to which he applied himſelf, that which pleaſed him moſt, and in which he made the greateſt Progreſs, was Logick. He had a very ſubtle Wit, and was inceſſantly whetting it by Diſputes, out of a reſtleſs Ambition to be a Maſter of his Weapons. So that in a ſhort time he gain'd the Reputation of the greateſt Philoſopher of his Age; and has always been eſteem'd the Founder of what we call the Learning of the Schoolmen.

HE finiſhed his Studies at Paris, where Learning was then in a very flouriſhing Condition. In this City he found that famous Profeſſor of Philoſophy, William des Champeaux, and ſoon became his favourite Scholar;

Scholar; but this did not laſt long. The Profeſſor was ſo hard put to it, to anſwer the ſubtle Objections of his new Scholar, that he grew uneaſy with him. The School ſoon run into Parties. The Senior Scholars, tranſported with Envy againſt Abelard, ſeconded their Maſter's Reſentment. All this ſerv'd only to increaſe the young Man's Preſumption, who now thought himſelf ſufficiently qualified to ſet up a School of his own. For this purpoſe he choſe an advantageous Place, which was the Town of Melun, ten Leagues from Paris, where the French Court reſided at that Time. Champeaux did all that he could to hinder the erecting of this School; but ſome of the great Courtiers being his Enemies, the Oppoſition he made to it only promoted the Deſign of his Rival.

THE Reputation of this new Profeſſor made a marvellous Progreſs, and eclipſed that of Champeaux. Theſe Succeſſes ſwell'd Abelard ſo much, that he removed his School to Corbeil, in order to engage his Enemy the cloſer in more frequent Diſputations. But his exceſſive Application to Study brought upon him a long and dangerous Sickneſs, which conſtrain'd him to return to his Native Air.

AFTER he had ſpent two Years in his own Country, he made a ſecond Adventure to Paris, where he found that his old Antagoniſt Champeaux had reſigned his Chair to another, and was retir'd into a Convent of Canons Regular, among whom he continued his Lectures. Abelard attackt him with ſuch Fury, that he quickly forced him to renounce his Tenets. Whereupon the poor Monk became ſo deſpicable, and his Antagoniſt in ſuch great Eſteem, that no Body went to the Lectures of Champeaux, and the very Man who ſucceeded him in his Profeſſorſhip, liſted under Abelard, and became his Scholar.

HE was ſcarce fix'd in his Chair, before he found himſelf expoſed more than ever to the ſtrokes of the moſt cruel Envy. Endeavours were uſed to do him ill Offices by all thoſe who were any ways diſaffected to him; another Profeſſor was put into his Place who had thought it his Duty to ſubmit to Abelard; in ſhort, ſo many Enemies were raiſed againſt him, that he was forced to retreat from Paris to Melun, Melun, and there revive his Logick Lectures. But this held not long; for hearing that Champeaux with all his Infantry was retired into a Country Village, he came and posted himself on Mount St. Genevieve, where he erected a new School, like a kind of Battery against him whom Champeaux had left to teach in Paris.

CHAMPEAUX understanding that his Substitute was thus besieged in his School, brought the Regular Canons back again to their Monastery. But this, instead of relieving his Friend, caused all his Scholars to desert him. At which the poor Philosopher was so mortified, that he follow'd the Example of his Patron Champeaux, and turn'd Monk too.

THE Dispute now lay wholly between Abelard and Champeaux, who renew'd it with great Warmth on both Sides; but the Senior had not the best on't. While it was depending, Abelard was obliged to visit his Father and Mother, who, according to the Fashion of those Times, had resolved to forsake the World, and retire into Convents, in order to devote themſelves more ſeriouſly to the Care of their Salvation.

HAVING aſſiſted at the Admiſſion of his Parents into their reſpective Monaſteries, and received their Bleſſing, he return'd to Paris, where, during his Abſence, his Rival had been promoted to the Biſhoprick of Chalons. And now being in a Condition to quit his School without any Suſpicion of flying from his Enemy, he reſolved to apply himſelf wholly to Divinity.

To this end he removed to Laon, where one Anſelm read Divinity-Lectures with good Reputation. But Abelard was ſo little ſatisfied with the old Man's Abilities, who, as he ſays, had a very mean Genius, and a great Fluency of Words without Senſe, that he took a Reſolution for the future, to hear no other Maſter than the Holy Scriptures. A good Reſolution! if a Man take the Spirit of God for his Guide, and be more concerned to diſtinguiſh Truth from Falſhood, than to confirm himſelf in thoſe Principles into which his own Fancy or Complexion, or the

the Prejudices of his Birth and Education, have insensibly led him.

ABELARD, together with the Holy Scriptures, read the ancient Fathers and Doctors of the Church; in which he spent whole Days and Nights, and profited so well, that instead of returning to Anselm's Lectures, he took up the same Imployment, and begun to explain the Prophet Ezekiel to some of his Fellow-Pupils: He perform'd this Part so agreeably, and in so easy a method, that he soon got a Croud of Auditors.

THE jealous Anselm could not bear this; he quickly found means to get the new Lecturer silenced. Upon this Abelard removed to Paris once more, where he proceeded with his publick Exposition on Ezekiel, and soon acquir'd the same Reputation for his Divinity, he had before gained for his Philosophy. His Eloquence and Learning procured him an incredible Number of Scholars from all Parts; so that if he had minded saving of Money, he might have grown rich with Ease in a short time. And happy had it been for him, if among all the Enemies his Learning expos'd him to, he had guarded his Heart againſt the Charms of Love. But alas! the greateſt Doctors are not always the wiſeſt men; as appears from Examples in every Age; but from none more remarkable than that of this Learned Man, whoſe Story I am now going to tell you.

ABELARD, beſides his uncommon Merit as a Scholar, had all the Accompliſhments of a Gentleman. He had a Greatneſs of Soul which nothing could ſhock, his Paſſions were Delicate, his Judgment Solid, and his Taſte Exquiſite. He was of a graceful Perſon, and carried himſelf with the Air of a Man of Quality. His Converſation was Sweet, Complaiſant, Eaſie, and Gentleman-like. It ſeem'd as tho' Nature had deſign'd him for a more elevated Employment than that of teaching the Sciences. He look'd upon Riches and Grandeur with Contempt, and had no higher Ambition than to make his Name famous among Learned Men, and to be reputed the greateſt Doctor of his Age: But he had human Frailty, and all his Philoſophy could not guard him from the Attacks of Love. For ſome Time indeed deed he had defended himſelf againſt this Paſſion pretty well, when the Temptation was but ſlight; but upon a more intimate Familiarity with agreeable Objects, he found his Reaſon fail him: Yet, in reſpect to his Wiſdom, he thought of Compounding the Matter, and reſolv'd at firſt, that Love and Philoſophy ſhould dwell together in the ſame Breaſt. He intended only to let out his Heart to the former, and that but for a little while; never conſidering that Love is a great Ruiner of Projects; and that when it has once got a ſhare in a Heart, it is eaſie to poſſeſs it ſelf of the whole.

He was now in the Seven or Eight and Twentieth Year of his Age, when he thought himſelf compleatly happy in all Reſpects, excepting that he wanted a Miſtreſs. He conſider'd therefore of making a Choice, but ſuch a one as might be moſt ſuitable to his Notions, and the Deſign he had of paſſing agreeably thoſe Hours he did not employ in his Study. He had ſeveral Ladies in his Eyes, to whom, as he ſays in one of his Letters, he could eaſily have recommended himſelf. For you muſt underſtand, that beſides his Qualifications mention'd before, he had a vein of Poetry, and made abundance of little eaſie Songs, which he would ſing with all the Advantage of a gallant Air and pleaſant Voice. But tho' he was cût out for a Lover, he was not over-haſty in determining his Choice. He was not of a Humour to be pleas'd with the Wanton or Forward; he ſcorn'd eaſie Pleaſures, and ſought to encounter with Difficulties and Impediments, that he might conquer with the greater Glory. In ſhort, he had not yet ſeen the Woman he was to Love.

NOT far from the Place where Abelard read his Lectures lived one Doctor Fulbert, a Canon of the Church of Notre-Dame. This Canon had a Neice named Heloiſe in his Houſe, whom he educated with great Care and Affection. Some Writers ſay *, that ſhe was the good Man's natural Daughter; but that, to prevent a publick Scandal, he gave out that ſhe was his Neice,

by

by his Sister, who upon her Death-bed had charged him with her Education. But tho' it was well known in those Times, as well as since, that the Neice of an Ecclesiastick is sometimes more nearly related to him, yet of this Damsel's Birth and Parentage we have nothing very certain. There is reason to think, from one of her Letters to Abelard, that she came of a mean Family; for she owns that great Honour was done to her Side by this Alliance, and that he had married much below himself. So that what Francis d'Amboise says, that she was of the Name and Family of Montmorency, has no manner of Foundation. It is very probable she was really and truly Fulbert's Neice, as he affirm'd her to be. Whatever she was for Birth, she was a very engaging Woman; and if she was not a perfect Beauty, she appear'd such at least in Abelard's Eyes. Her Person was well-proportion'd, her Features regular, her Eyes sparkling, her Lips Vermillion and well form'd, her Complexion animated, her Air fine, and her Aspect sweet and agreeable. She had a surprizing Quickness of Wit, an incredible Memory, and a considerable share of Learning, join'd with Humility; and all these Accomplishments were attended with something so graceful and moving, that it was impossible for those who kept her Company not to be in Love with her.

As soon as Abelard had seen her and convers'd with her, the Charms of her Wit and Beauty made such an Impression upon his Heart, that he presently conceived a most violent Passion for her, and resolved to make it his whole Endeavour to win her Affections. And now he that formerly quitted his Patrimony to pursue his Studies, laid aside all other Engagements to attend his new Passion.

IN vain did Philosophy and Reason importune him to return; he was deaf to their Call, and thought of nothing but how to enjoy the Sight and Company of his dear Heloise. And he soon met with the luckiest Opportunity in the World. Fulbert, who had the greatest Affection imaginable for his Neice, finding her to have a good share of natural Wit, and a particular Genius for Learning, thought himself obliged to improve the Talents which which Nature had ſo liberally beſtow'd on her. He had already put her to learn ſeveral Languages, which ſhe quickly came to underſtand ſo well, that her Fame began to ſpread it ſelf abroad, and the Wit and Learning of Heloiſe was every where diſcours'd of. And tho' her Uncle for his own ſhare was no great Scholar, he was very ſollicitous that his Neice ſhould have all poſſible Improvements. He was willing therefore ſhe ſhould have Maſters to inſtruct her in what ſhe had a Mind to Learn, but he loved his Money; and this kept him from providing for her Education ſo well as ſhe deſired.

ABELARD, who knew Heloiſe's Inclinations, and the Temper of her Uncle, thought this an Opportunity favourable to his Deſign. He was already well acquainted with Fulbert, as being his Brother-Canon in the ſame Church; and he obſerved how fond the other was of his Friendſhip, and what an Honour he eſteem'd it to be intimate with a Perſon of his Reputation. He therefore told him one Day in Familiarity, that he was at a loſs loſs for ſome Houſe to Board in; and if you could find Room for me, ſaid he, in yours, I leave it to you to name the Terms.

THE good Man immediately conſidering, that by this Means he ſhould provide an able Maſter for his Neice, who inſtead of taking Money of him, offer'd to pay him well for his Board, embraced his Propoſal with all the Joy imaginable, gave him a thouſand Careſſes, and deſir'd he would conſider him for the future as one ambitious of the ſtricteſt Friendſhip with him.

WHAT an unſpeakable Joy was this to the amorous Abelard! to conſider that he was going to live with her, who was the only Object of his Deſires! that he ſhould have the Opportunity of ſeeing and converſing with her every Day, and of acquainting her with his Paſſion! However he conceal'd his Joy at preſent, leſt he ſhould make his Intentions ſuſpected. We told you before how liberal Nature had been to our Lover, in making his Perſon every way agreeable; ſo that he flatter'd himſelf himſelf that it was almoſt impoſſible * that any Woman ſhould reject his Addreſſes. Perhaps he was miſtaken: the Sex has Variety of Humours. However, conſider him as a Philoſopher who had hitherto liv'd in a ſtrict Chaſtity †, he certainly reaſon'd well in the Buſineſs of Love, when he concluded that Heloiſe would be an eaſier Conqueſt to him than others, becauſe her Learning gave him an Opportunity of eſtabliſhing a Correſpondence by Letters, in which he might diſcover his Paſſion with greater freedom, than he durſt preſume to uſe in Converſation.

Some time after the Canon had taken Abelard into his Houſe, as they were diſcourſing one Day about things ſomewhat above Fulbert's Capacity, the latter turn'd the Diſcourſe inſenſibly to the good Qualities of his Neice; he inform'd Abelard of the Excellency of her Wit, and how ſtrong a Propenſity ſhe had to improve in Learning; and withal made it his earneſt Requeſt, that he would take the Pains to inſtruct her. Abelard pretended to be ſurprized at a Propoſal of this Nature. He told him that Learning was not the proper Buſineſs of Women; that ſuch Inclinations in them had more of Humour or Curioſity, than a ſolid Deſire of Knowledge; and could hardly paſs, among either the Learned or Ignorant, without drawing upon them the Imputation of Conceit and Affectation. Fulbert anſwer'd, that this was very true of Women of common Capacities; but he hop'd when he had diſcours'd with his Neice, and found what Progreſs ſhe had made already, and what a Capacity ſhe had for Learning, he would be of another Opinion. Abelard aſſured him, he was ready to do all he could for her Improvement, and if ſhe was not like other Women, who hate to learn any thing beyond their Needle, he would ſpare for no pains to make Heloiſe anſwer the Hopes which her Uncle had conceived of her.

THE Canon was tranſported with the Civility of the young Doctor; he return'd him Thanks, and proteſted he could not do him a more acceptable Service than to aſſiſt his Neice in her Endeavours to learn; he therefore entreated him once more, to ſet apart ſome of his Time, which he did not imploy in publick, for this purpoſe: And (as if he had known his deſign'd Intreague, and was willing to promote it) he commited her entirely to his Care, and begg'd of him to treat her with the Authority of a Maſter, not only to chide her, but even to correct her whenever ſhe was guilty of any Neglect or Diſobedience to his Commands.

FULBERT, in this, ſhew'd a Simplicity without Example; but the Affection which he had for his Neice was ſo blind, and Abelard had ſo well eſtabliſhed his Reputation for Wiſdom, that the Uncle never ſcrupled in the leaſt to truſt them together, and thought he had all the Security in the World for their Virtue. Abelard, you may be ſure, made uſe of the Freedom which was given him. He ſaw his beautiful Creature every Hour, he ſet her Leſſons every Day, and was extreamly pleaſed to ſee what Proficiency ſhe made. Heloiſe, for her part, was ſo taken with her Maſter, that ſhe lik'd nothing ſo well as what ſhe learn'd from him; and the Maſter was charm'd with that Quickneſs of Apprehenſion, with which his Scholar learn'd the moſt difficult Leſſons. But he did not intend to ſtop here. He knew ſo well how to inſinuate into the Affections of this young Perſon, he gave her ſuch plain Intimations of what was in his Heart, and ſpoke ſo agreeably of the Paſſion, which he had conceived for her, that he had the Satisfaction of ſeeing himſelf well underſtood. It is no difficult matter to make a Girl of Eighteen in Love. And Abelard, having ſo much Wit and agreeable Humour, muſt needs make a much greater Progreſs in her Affections, than ſhe did in the Leſſons which he taught her. So that in a ſhort time ſhe fell ſo much in love with him, that ſhe could deny him nothing.

Leſſons

FULBERT had a Country Houſe at Corbeil, to which the Lovers often reſorted, under Pretence of applying themſelves more cloſely to their Studies: There they converconverſed freely, and gave themſelves up entirely to the Pleaſures of a mutual Paſſion. They took advantage of that Privacy which Study and Contemplation require, without ſubjecting themſelves to the Cenſure of thoſe who obſerv'd it.

In this Retirement, Abelard owns that more Time was employ'd in ſoft Careſſes than in Lectures of Philoſophy. Sometimes he pretended to uſe the Severity of a Maſter; and the better to deceive ſuch as might be Spies upon them, he exclaim'd againſt Heloiſe, and reproached her for her Negligence. But how different were his Menaces from thoſe which are inſpir'd by Anger!

Never did two Lovers give a greater Looſe to their Delights than theſe did for five or ſix Months; they liv'd in all the Endearments which could enter into the Heart of young Beginners. This is Abelard's own Account of the matter. He compares himſelf to ſuch as have been long kept in a ſtarving Condition, and at laſt are brought to a Feaſt. A grave and ſtudious Man exceeds a Debauché in his Enjoyments.

ments of a Woman whom he loves, and of whom he is paſſionately beloved.

ABELARD being thus enchanted with the Careſſes of his Miſtreſs, neglected all his ſerious and important Affairs. His Performances in publick were wretched. His Scholars perceiv'd it, and ſoon gueſs'd the Reaſon. His Head was turn'd to nothing but amorous Verſes. His School was his Averſion, and he ſpent as little Time in it as he could. As for his Lectures, they were commonly the old ones ſerved up again: The Night was wholly loſt from his Studies; and his Leiſure was employ'd in writing Songs, which were diſpers'd and ſung in divers Provinces of France many Years after. In ſhort, our Lovers, who were in their own Opinion the happieſt Pair in the World, kept ſo little guard that their Amours were every where talk'd of, and all the World ſaw plainly that the Sciences were not always the Subject of their Converſation. Only honeſt Fulbert, under whoſe Noſe all this was done, was the laſt Man that heard any thing of it: He wanted Eyes to ſee that which which was viſible to all the World; and if any Body went about to tell him of it, he was prepoſſeſt with ſo good an Opinion of his Neice and her Maſter, that he would believe nothing againſt them.

But at laſt ſo many Diſcoveries were daily made to him, that he could not help believing ſomething; he therefore reſolved to ſeparate them, and by that means prevent the ill Conſequences of their too great Familiarity; however he thought it beſt to convict them himſelf, before he proceeded further; and therefore watched them ſo cloſely that he had one Day an Opportunity of receiving ocular Satisfaction that the Reports he had heard were true. I ſhort, he ſurpriz'd them together. And though he was naturally Cholerick, yet he appear'd ſo moderate on this occaſion as to leave them under diſmal Apprehenſions of ſomething worſe to come after. The Reſult was, that they muſt be parted.

Who can expreſs the Torment our Lovers felt upon this Separation! however it ſerved only to unite their Hearts more Propoſal ſhe peremptorily rejected it, and gave ſuch Reaſons * for her Refuſal, as left Abelard in the greateſt Aſtoniſhment.

INDEED a Refuſal of this Nature is ſo extraordinary a thing, that perhaps another Inſtance of it is not to be found in Hiſtory. I perſwade my ſelf therefore, that I ſhall not offend my Reader, if I make ſome few Remarks upon it. It often happens that the Paſſion of Love ſtifles or over-rules the Rebukes of Conſcience; but it is unuſual for it to extinguiſh the Senſibility of Honour. I don't ſpeak of Perſons of a mean Birth and no Education; but for others, all young Women, I ſuppoſe, that engage in Love Intreagues, flatter themſelves with one of theſe Views; either they hope they ſhall not prove with Child, or they ſhall conceal it from the Word, or they ſhall get themſelves married. As for ſuch as reſolve to deſtroy the Fruit of their Amours, there are but few ſo void of all natural Affection, as to be capable of this utmoſt Degree of Barbarity. However this ſhews plainly that if Love tyrannizes ſometimes, it is ſuch a Tyrant as leaves Honour in Poſſeſſion of its Rights. But Heloiſe had a Paſſion ſo ſtrong, that ſhe was not at all concerned for her Honour or Reputation. She was over-joy'd to find her ſelf with Child, and yet ſhe did her utmoſt not to be married. Never ſure was ſo odd an Example, as theſe two things made, when put together. The firſt was very extraordinary; and how many young Women in the World would rather be married to a diſagreeable Husband, than live in a State of Reproach? They know the Remedy is bad enough, and will coſt them dear; but what ſignifies that, ſo long as the Name of Husband hides the Flaws made in their Honour? But as for Heloiſe, ſhe was not ſo nice in this Point. An exceſs of Paſſion never heard of before, made her chuſe to be Abelard's Miſtreſs rather than his Wife. We ſhall ſee, in the Courſe of this Hiſtory, how firm ſhe was in this Reſolution, with what Arguments ſhe ſupported it, and how earneſtly ſhe perſwaded her Gallant to be of the ſame Mind.

ABELARD, who was willing to loſe no time, leſt his dear Heloiſe ſhould fall into her Uncle's Hands, diſguiſed her in the Habit of a Nun, and ſent her away with the greateſt Diſpatch, hoping, that after ſhe was brought to Bed, he ſhould have more leiſure to perſwade her to Marriage, by which they might skreen themſelves from the Reproach which muſt otherwiſe come upon them, as ſoon as the Buſineſs ſhould be publickly known.

As ſoon as Heloiſe was ſet forward on her Journey, Abelard reſolv'd to make Fulbert a Viſit in order to appeaſe him, if poſſible, and prevent the ill Effects of his juſt Indignation.

THE News that Heloiſe was privately withdrawn, ſoon made a great Noiſe in the Neighbourhood; and reaching Fulbert's Ears, fill'd him with Grief and Melancholy. Beſides that he had a very tender Affection for his Neice, and could not live without her, he had the utmoſt Reſentment of the Affront which Abelard had put upon him, by abuſing the Freedom he had allowed him. upon our poor Lovers, and had very dreadful Conſequences.

WHEN Fulbert ſaw Abelard, and heard from him the Reaſon why Heloiſe was withdrawn, never was Man in ſuch a Paſſion. He abandon'd himſelf to the utmoſt Tranſports of Rage, Deſpair, and Thirſt of Revenge. All the Affronts, Reproaches and Menaces that could be thought of were heaped upon Abelard; who was, poor Man, very Paſſive, and ready to make the Canon all the Satisfaction he was able. He gave him leave to ſay what he pleaſed; and when he ſaw that he had tired himſelf with exclaiming, he took up the Diſcourſe, and ingenuouſly confeſt his Crime. Then he had Recourſe to all the Prayers, Submiſſions and Promiſes he could invent; and begg'd of him to conſider the Force of Love, and what Foils this Tyrant has given to the greateſt Men: That the Occaſion of the preſent Misfortune, was the moſt violent Paſſion that ever was; that this Paſſion continued ſtill; and that he was ready to give both him and his Neice all the Satisfaction which this ſort of Injury required. bert interrupting him. Yes, replied Abelard, if you pleaſe, and ſhe will conſent. If I pleaſe! ſaid the Canon, pauſing a little; if ſhe will conſent! And do you queſtion either? Upon this he was going to offer him his Reaſons, after his haſty way, why they ſhould be married: But Abelard entreated him to ſuppreſs his Paſſion a while, and hear what he had to offer: Which was, that their Marriage might for ſome time be kept ſecret. No, ſays the Canon; the Diſhonour you have done my Neice is publick, and the Reparation you make her ſhall be ſo too. But Abelard told him, that ſince they were to be one Family, he hoped he would conſider his Intereſt as his own. At laſt, after a great many Entreaties, Fulbert ſeem'd content it ſhould be as Abelard deſired, that he ſhould marry Heloiſe after ſhe was brought to Bed, and that in the mean time the Buſineſs ſhould be kept Secret.

ABELARD, having given his Scholars a Vacation, return'd into Britany, to viſit his deſigned Spouſe, and to acquaint her with what had paſſed. She was not at all concern'd at her Uncle's Diſpleaſure; but but that which troubled her was, the Reſolution which ſhe ſaw her Lover had taken to marry her. She endeavour'd to diſſwade him from it with all the Arguments ſhe could think of. She begun with repreſenting to him the Wrong he did himſelf in thinking of Marriage: That as ſhe never loved him but for his own ſake, ſhe preferr'd his Glory, Reputation and Intereſt before her own. I know my Uncle, ſaid ſhe, will never be pacified with any thing we can do: And what Honour ſhall I get by being your Wife, when at the ſame time I certainly ruin your Reputation? What Curſe may I not juſtly fear, ſhould I rob the World of ſo Eminent a Perſon as you are? What an Injury ſhall I do the Church? How much ſhall I diſoblige the Learned? And what a Shame and Diſparagement will it be to you, whom Nature has fitted for the Publick Good, to devote your ſelf entirely to a Wife? Remember what St. Paul ſays, Art thou looſed from a wife? ſeek not a wife. If neither this great Man, nor the Fathers of the Church, can make you change your Reſolution, conſider at leaſt what your Philoſophers ſay of it. Socrates has proved, by many Arguments, that a Wiſe Man ought not to marry. Tully put away his Wife Terentia; and when Hircius offer'd him his Siſter in Marriage, he told him he deſired to be excuſed, becauſe he could never bring himſelf to divide his Thoughts between his Books and his Wife. In ſhort, ſaid ſhe, how can the Study of Divinity and Philoſophy comport with the cries of Children, the Songs of Nurſes, and all the Hurry of a Family? What an odd ſight will it be, to ſee Maids and Scholars, Desks and Cradles, Books and Diſtaffs, Pens and Spindles one among another? Thoſe who are Rich are never diſturb'd with the Care and Charges of Houſe-keeping. But with you Scholars it is far otherwiſe. * He that will get an Eſtate muſt mind the Affairs of the World, and conſequently is taken off from the ſtudy of Divinity and Philoſophy. Marriage, and be aſhamed that you cannot come up to them. Be more careful to maintain the Character and Dignity of a Philoſopher. Don't you know that there is no Action of Life which draws after it ſo ſure and long a Repentance, and to ſo little Purpoſe? You fancy to your ſelf the Enjoyments you ſhall have in being bound to me by a Bond which nothing but Death can break: But know, there is no ſuch thing as ſweet Chains; and there is a thouſand times more Glory, Honour, and Pleaſure in keeping firm to a Union which Love alone has eſtabliſhed, which is ſupported by mutual Eſteem and Merit, and which owes its continuance to nothing but the Satisfaction of ſeeing each other free. Shall the Laws and Cuſtoms which the groſs and carnal World has invented, hold us together more ſurely than the Bonds of mutual Affection? Take my word for it, you'll ſee me too often, when you ſee me every Day: you'll have no Value for my Love nor Favours, when they are due to you, and coſt you no Care. Perhaps you don't think of all this at preſent; but you'll think of nothing elſe when it will be too late. I don't take notice what the World will say, to see a Man in your Circumstances get him a Wife, and so throw away your Reputation, your Fortune, and your Quiet. In short, continued she, the Quality of Mistress is a hundred times more pleasing to me, than that of Wife. Custom indeed has given a Dignity to this latter Name, and we are imposed upon by it; but Heaven is my Witness, I had rather be Abelard's Mistress, than lawful Wife to the Emperor of the whole World. I am very sure I shall always prefer your Advantage and Satisfaction, before my own Honour, and all the Reputation, Wealth, and Enjoyments, which the most splendid Marriage cou'd bring me. Thus Heloise argued, and added a great many more Reasons which I forbear to relate, lest I should tire my Reader. It is enough for him to know, that they are chiefly grounded upon her Preference of Love to Marriage, and Liberty to Necessity.

WE might therefore suppose that Heloise was afraid lest Marriage should prove the Tomb of Love. The Count de Bussi, who who paſſes for the Tranſlator of ſome of her Letters, makes this to be her Meaning, tho' cloathed in delicate Language. But if we examine thoſe which ſhe writ to Abelard after their Separation, and the Expreſſions ſhe uſes to put him in Mind, that he was indebted for the Paſſion ſhe had for him to nothing but Love it ſelf, we muſt allow that ſhe had more refin'd Notions, and that never Woman was ſo diſintereſted. She loved Abelard, 'tis true; but ſhe declared, it was not his Sex that ſhe moſt valued in him.

Some Authors * are of Opinion, that it was not an Exceſs of Love which made Abelard preſs Heloiſe to Marriage, but only to quiet his Conſcience: But how can any one tell his Reaſons for Marriage, better than he himſelf? Others ſay †, that if Heloiſe did really oppoſe Abelard's Deſign of marrying her ſo earneſtly, it was not becauſe ſhe thought better of Concubinage than a married Life; but becauſe her Affection and Reſpect for her Lover, leading her to ſeek his Honour and Advantage in all Things, she was afraid that by marrying him, she should stand between him and a Bishoprick, which she thought his Wit and Learning well deserved. But there is no such thing in her Letters, nor in the long Account which Abelard has left us of the Arguments which his Mistress used to dissuade him from Marriage. These are the Faults of many Authors, who put such Words in the Mouths of Persons, as are most conformable to their own Ideas. It is often more advantageous that a Woman should leave her Lover free for Church-Dignities, than render him incapable of them by Marriage. But is it just therefore to suppose, that Heloise had any such Motives? There is indeed a known Story of a Man that was possessed of a Prebend, and quitted it for a Wife. The Day after the Wedding, he said to his Bride, My Dear, consider how passionately I loved you, since I lost my Preferment to marry you. You have done a very foolish thing, said she; you might have kept that, and have had me notwithstanding.

BUT to return to our Lovers. A modern Author, who well understood human Nature, Nature, has affirm'd; * That Women by the Favours they grant to Men grow the fonder of them; but on the contrary, the Men grow more indifferent. This is not always true. Abelard was not the leſs enamour'd with Heloiſe, after ſhe had given him the utmoſt Proofs of her Love; and their Familiarity was ſo far from having abated his Flame, that it ſeems all the Eloquence of Heloiſe could not perſuade Abelard, that he wrong'd himſelf in thinking to marry her. He admir'd the Wit, the Paſſion, and the Ingenuity of his Miſtreſs; but in theſe things he did not come ſhort of her: He knew ſo well how to repreſent to her the neceſſity of Marriage, the Diſcourſe which he had about it with Fulbert, his Rage if they declin'd it, and how dangerous it might be to both of them, that at laſt ſhe conſented to do whatever he pleas'd; but ſtill with an inconceivable Reluctance, which ſhew'd that ſhe yielded for no other Reaſon, but the fear of diſobliging him.

ABELARD was willing to be near his Miſtreſs till ſhe was brought to Bed, which in a ſhort time ſhe was of a Boy. As ſoon as Heloiſe was fit to go Abroad, Abelard carried her to Paris, where they were married in the moſt private manner that could be, having no other Company but Fulbert, and two or three particular Friends. However, the Wedding quickly came to be known. The News of it was already whiſper'd about; People ſoon began to talk of it more openly, till at laſt they mention'd it to the married Pair. Fulbert, who was leſs concern'd to keep his Word, than to cover the Reproach of his Family, took care to ſpread it abroad. But Heloiſe, who loved Abelard a thouſand times better than ſhe did herſelf, and always valued her dear Doctor's Honour above her own, denied it with the moſt ſolemn Proteſtations, and did all ſhe could to make the World believe her. She conſtantly affirm'd, that the Reports of it were meer Slanders; That Abelard never propoſed any ſuch thing; and if he had, ſhe would never have conſented to it. In ſhort, ſhe deny'd it ſo conſtantly, and with with ſuch Earneſtneſs, that ſhe was generally believ'd. Many People thought, and boldly affirm'd, that the Doctor's Enemies had ſpread this Story on purpoſe to leſſen his Character. This Report came to Fulbert's Ears, who, knowing that Heloiſe was the ſole Author of it, fell into ſo outragious a Paſſion at her, that after a thouſand Reproaches and Menaces he proceeded to uſe her barbarouſly. But Abelard, who loved her never the worſe for being his Wife, could not ſee this many Days with Patience. He reſolved therefore to order Matters ſo as to deliver her from this State of Perſecution. To this purpoſe they conſulted together what Courſe was to be taken; and agreed, that for ſetting them both free, her from the Power and ill Humour of her Uncle, and him from the perſecuting Reports which went about of him, Heloiſe ſhould retire into a Convent, where ſhe ſhould take the Habit of a Nun, all but the Vail, that ſo ſhe might eaſily come out again, when they ſhould have a more favourable Opportunity. This Deſign was propoſed, approved, and executed, almoſt at the ſame time.

time. By this means they effectually put a ſtop to all Reports about their Marriage. But the Canon was too dangerous a Perſon to be admitted to this Conſultation; he would never have agreed to their Propoſal; nor could he hear of it without the utmoſt Rage. 'Twas then that he conceived a new deſire of Revenge, which he purſued till he had executed it in the moſt cruel manner imaginable. This Retreat of Heloiſe gave him the more ſenſible Affliction, becauſe ſhe was ſo far from covering her own Reputation, that ſhe compleated his Shame. He conſidered it as Abelard's Contrivance, and a freſh Inſtance of his perfidious Dealing towards him. And this Reflection put him upon ſtudying how to be revenged on them both at one Stroke; which aiming at the Root of the Miſchief, ſhould for ever diſable them from offending again.

WHILE this Plot was in Agitation, the Lovers, who were not apt to trouble their Heads about what might happen, ſpent their Time in the moſt agreeable manner that could be. Abelard could not live long without a ſight of his dear Wife.

Wife. He made her frequent Viſits in the Convent of Argenteuil, to which ſhe was retired. The Nuns of this Abby enjoyed a very free kind of Life: The Grates and Parlours were open enough. As for Heloiſe, ſhe had ſuch excellent Qualifications, as made the good Siſters very fond of her, and extreamely pleaſed that they had ſuch an amiable Companion. And as they were not ignorant what Reports there were abroad, that ſhe was married to the famous Abelard, (tho' ſhe denied it to the laſt) the moſt diſcerning among them, obſerving the frequent Viſits of the Doctor, eaſily imagin'd that ſhe had Reaſons for keeping her ſelf private; and ſo they took her Caſe into Conſideration, and expreſt a wonderful Compaſſion for her Misfortunes.

Some of them, whom Heloiſe loved above the reſt, and in whom ſhe put great Confidence, were not a little aiding and aſſiſting in the private Interviews which ſhe had with Abelard, and in giving him Opportunities to enter the Convent. The amorous Doctor made the beſt Uſe of every thing: The Habit which Heloiſe wore, the the Place where he was to ſee her, the Times and Seaſons proper for his Viſit; the Stratagems which muſt be uſed to facilitate his Entrance, and carry him undiſcover'd to Heloiſe's Chamber; the Difficulties they met with, the Reaſons they had for not letting it be known who they were; and the fear they were in of being taken together: All this gave their Amours an Air of Novelty, and added to their lawful Embraces all the Taſte of ſtolen Delights.

THESE Exceſſes had then their Charms, but in the end had fatal Conſequences: The furious Canon perſiſting in his Deſign of being revenged on Abelard, notwithſtanding his Marriage with his Neice, found Means to corrupt a Domeſtick of the Unfortunate Doctor, who gave Admittance into his Maſter's Chamber to ſome Aſſaſſins hired by Fulbert, who ſeized him in his Sleep, and cruelly deprived him of his Manhood, but not his Life. The Servant and his Accomplices fled for it; the wretched Abelard raiſed ſuch terrible Outcries, that the People in the Houſe and the Neighbours being alarm'd, haſten'd to him, and gave him ſuch ſpeedy Aſſiſtance, that he was ſoon out of a Condition of fearing Death.

THE News of this Accident made a great Noiſe, and its Singularity raiſed the Curioſity of abundance of Perſons, who came the next Day, as in Proceſſion, to ſee, to lament and comfort him. His Scholars loudly bewailed his Misfortune, and the Women diſtinguiſhed themſelves upon this Occaſion, by extraordinary Marks of Tenderneſs. And 'tis probable among the great Number of Ladies which pity'd Abelard, there were ſome with whom he had been very intimate: For his Philoſophy did not make him ſcrupulous enough to eſteem every ſmall Infidelity a Crime, when it did not leſſen his conſtant Love of Heloiſe.

THIS Action of Fulbert was too Tragical to paſs unpuniſhed; the traiterous Servant and one of the Aſſaſſins were ſeized, and condemned to loſe their Eyes, and to ſuffer what they had done to Abelard. But Fulbert denying he had any Share in the Action, ſaved himſelf from the Puniſhment, with the Loſs only of his Benefices.

This Sentence did not satisfie Abelard; he made his Complaint to no purpose to the Bishop and Canons, and if he had made a Remonstrance at Rome, where he once had a design of carrying the Matter, 'tis probable he would have had no better Success. It requires too much Mony to gain a Cause there. One Foulques, Prior of Deuil, an intimate Friend of Abelard, wrote thus to him upon the Occasion of his Misfortune. * If you appeal to the Pope, without bringing an immense Sum of Mony, it will be useless; nothing can satisfie the Infinite Avarice and Luxury of the Romans. I question if you have enough for such an Undertaking; and if you attempt it, nothing will perhaps remain but the Vexation of having flung away so much Mony. They who go to Rome without large Sums to squander away, will return just as they went, the Expence of their Journey only excepted. But since I am upon Foulques's Letter, which is too Extraordinary to be passed over in Silence, I shall give the Reader some of its more remarkable Passages, adding some Reflections which may make him Amends for the Trouble of a new Digreſſion.

THIS Friend of Abelard lays before him many Advantages which might be drawn from his Misfortune. He tells him, his extraordinary Talents, Subtilty, Eloquence and Learning, had drawn from all Parts an incredible Number of Auditors, and ſo fill'd him with exceſſive Vanity: He hints gently at another thing, which contributed not a little towards making him proud; namely, that the Women continually followed him, and gloried in drawing him into their Snares. This Misfortune therefore would cure him of his Pride, and free him from thoſe Snares of Women which had reduced him even to Indigence, tho' his Profeſſion got him a large Revenue; and now he would never impoveriſh himſelf by his Gallantries.

HELOISE her ſelf in ſome Paſſages of her Letters ſays, that there was neither Maid nor Wife*, who in Abelard's Abſence did not form Deſires for him, and in his Preſence was not inflamed with Love: That Queens themſelves and Ladies of the firſt Quality envy'd the Pleaſures ſhe enjoy'd with him. But we are not to take theſe Words of Heloiſe in a ſtrict Senſe; becauſe as ſhe loved Abelard to Madneſs, ſo ſhe imagined every one elſe did. Beſides that, Report to be ſure hath added to the Truth. It is not at all probable that a Man of Abelard's Senſe, and who according to all Appearance paſſionately loved his Wife, ſhould not be able to contain himſelf in ſome Bounds, but ſhould ſquander away all his Mony upon Miſtreſſes, even to the not reſerving what was ſufficient to provide for his Neceſſities. Foulques owns that he ſpeaks only upon Hear-ſay, and in that no doubt Envy and Jealouſy had their Part.

FOULQUES tells him beſides, that the Amputation of a Part of his Body, of which he made ſuch ill Uſe, would ſuppreſs at the ſame time a great many troubleſome Paſſions, and procure him the Liberty of reflecting on himſelf, inſtead of being hurried to and fro by his Paſſions: His

His Meditations would be no more interrupted by the Emotions of the Fleſh, and therefore he would be more ſucceſsful in diſcovering the Secrets of Nature. He reckons it as a great Advantage to him, that he would no more be the Terror of Husbands, and might now lodge any where without being ſuſpected. And forgets not to acquaint him, he might converſe with the fineſt Women without any fear of thoſe Temptations which ſometimes overpower even Age it ſelf, upon the ſight of ſuch Objects. And laſtly, he would have the Happineſs of being exempt from the Illuſions of Sleep; which Exemption, according to him, is a peculiar Bleſſing.

It was with Reaſon that Foulques reckons all theſe as Advantages very extraordinary in the Life of an Eccleſiaſtick; 'tis eaſy to obſerve that, to a Perſon who devotes himſelf to Continence, nothing can be more Happy than to be inſenſible to Beauty and Love; for they who cannot maintain their Chaſtity, but by continual Combats, are very unhappy: The Life of ſuch Perſons is uneaſy, their State always doubtful. They but too much feel the Trouble

Trouble of their Warfare, and if they come off victorious in an Engagement, 'tis often with a great many Wounds. Even such of them as in a retired Life are at the greatest Distance from Temptations, by continually struggling with their Inclinations, and setting Barriers against the Irruptions of the Flesh, are in a miserable Condition. Their Entrenchments are often forced; and their Conscience fill'd with Sorrow and Anxiety. What Progress might one make in the Ways of Virtue, who is not obliged to fight an Enemy for every Foot of Ground? Had Abelard's Misfortune made him indeed such as Foulques supposed, we should see him in his Letters express his Motives of Comfort with a better Grace. But though he now was in a Condition not able to satisfy a Passion by which he had suffered so much, yet was he not insensible at the sight of those Objects which once gave him so much Pleasure. This Discourse therefore of Foulques, far from comforting Abelard in his Affliction, seems capable of producing the contrary Effect; and it is astonishing if Abelard did not take it so, and think he rather inſulted him, and conſequently reſent it.

As to Dreams, St. Auſtin informs us of the Advantage Foulques tells his Friend he had gain'd. St. Auſtin implores the Grace of God to deliver him from this ſort of Weakneſs, and ſays he gave his Conſent to thoſe things in his Sleep which he ſhould abominate awake, and laments exceedingly ſo great a remaining Weakneſs.

But let us go on with this charitable Friend's Letter; it hath too near a Relation to this Hiſtory, to leave any part of it untouched. Matrimonial Functions (continues Foulques) and the Cares of a Family, will not now hinder your Application to pleaſe God. And what a Happineſs is it, not to be in a Capacity of ſinning? and then he brings the Examples of St. Origen, and other Martyrs, who rejoice now in Heaven, for their being upon Earth in the ſame Condition Abelard laments. As if the Impoſſibility of committing a Sin could ſecure any one from deſiring to do it. But one of his greateſt Motives of Comfort, and one upon which he inſiſts the moſt is, becauſe his Misfortune is irreparable.

rable. This is indeed true in Fact, but the Conſequence of his Reaſoning is not ſo certain, Afflict not your ſelf (ſays he) becauſe your Misfortune is of ſuch a Nature as is never to be repaired.

IT muſt be owned that the general Topicks of Conſolation have two Faces, and may therefore be conſidered very differently, even ſo as to ſeem Arguments for Sorrow. As for Inſtance, one might argue very juſtly, that a Mother ſhould not yield too much to Grief upon the Loſs of a Son, becauſe her Tears are unavailable, and tho' ſhe ſhould kill her ſelf with Sorrow, ſhe can never by theſe Means bring her Son to Life. Yet this very thing, that all ſhe can do is uſeleſs, is the main Occaſion of her Grief; ſhe could bear it patiently, could ſhe any way retrieve her Loſs. When Solon * lamented the Death of his Son, and ſome Friend by way of Comfort told him, his Tears were inſignificant, that, ſaid he, is the very Reaſon why I weep.

BUT Foulques argues much better afterwards; he ſays, Abelard did not ſuffer this in the Commiſſion of any ill Act, but ſleeping peaceably in his Bed. That is, he was not caught in any open Fact, ſuch as has coſt others the like Loſs. This is indeed a much better Topick than the former; though it muſt be allowed that Abelard had drawn this Misfortune on himſelf by a Crime as bad as Adultery; yet the Fault was over, and he had made all the Reparation which was in his Power, and when they maimed him he thought no harm to any Body.

ABELARD's Friend makes uſe likewiſe of other conſolatory Reaſons in his Letter, and repreſents to him after a very moving manner, the Part which the Biſhop and Canons, and all the Eccleſiaſticks of Paris, took in his Diſgrace, and the Mourning there was among the Inhabitants, and eſpecially the Women, upon this Occaſion. But in this Article of Conſolation how comes it to paſs that he makes no mention of Heloiſe? This ought not to appear ſtrange; ſhe was the moſt injured, and therefore queſtionleſs her Sorrows were ſufficiently known to him, and it would be no News to tell the Husband that his Wife was in the utmoſt Affliction for him. For as we obſerved before, tho' ſhe was in a Convent, ſhe had not renounced her Husband, and thoſe frequent Viſits he made her were not ſpent in reading Homilies. But let us make an End of our Reflections on Foulques's curious Letter. Foulques, after adviſing Abelard not to think of carrying the matter before the Pope, by aſſuring him that it required too great Expence to obtain any Satisfaction at that Court, concludes all with this laſt Motive of Conſolation, that the imagined Happineſs he had loſt was always accompanied with abundance of Vexation, but if he perſevered in his Spirit of Reſignation, he would without doubt at the laſt Day obtain that Juſtice he had now failed of. 'Tis great Pity we have not Abelard's Anſwer to this delicate Letter, the Matter then would look like one of Job's Dialogues with his Friends. Abelard would generally have enough to reply, and Foulques would often be but a ſorry Comforter. However it is certain this Letter was of ſome Weight with Abelard, for we find afterwards he never thought of making a Voyage

Digitized by Google

Voyage to Rome. Reſolved to bear his Calamity patiently, he left to God the avenging of the cruel and ſhameful Abuſe he had ſuffered.

BUT let us return to Heloiſe. 'Tis probable her Friends of the Convent of Argenteuil conceal'd ſo heavy a Misfortune from her for ſome Time; but at laſt ſhe heard the fatal News: Though the Rage and Fury of her Uncle threaten'd her long ſince with ſome Puniſhment, yet could ſhe never ſuſpect any thing of this Nature. It will be ſaying too little to tell the Reader ſhe felt all the Shame and Sorrow that is poſſible. She only can expreſs thoſe violent Emotions of her Soul upon ſo ſevere an Occaſion.

IN all Probability this Misfortune of Abelard would have been a thorough Cure of her Paſſion, if we might argue from like Caſes; but there is no Rule ſo general as not to admit of ſome Exceptions; and Heloiſe's Love upon this ſevere Tryal proved like Queen Stratonice's, who was not leſs Paſſionate for her Favourite Combabus when ſhe diſcover'd his Impotence, than ſhe had been before.

SHAME and Sorrow had no leſs ſeized Abelard than Heloiſe, nor dared he ever after appear in the World. So that he reſolved, immediately upon his Cure, to baniſh himſelf from the ſight of Men, and hide himſelf in the Darkneſs of a Monaſtick Life; avoiding all Converſation with any kind of Perſons excepting his dear Heloiſe, by whoſe Company he endeavoured to comfort himſelf; but ſhe at laſt reſolved to follow his Example, and continue for ever in the Convent of Argenteuil where ſhe was. Abelard himſelf confeſſes that Shame, rather than Devotion, had made him take the Habit of a Monk; and that it was Jealouſy, more than Love, which engaged him to perſwade Heloiſe to be Profeſs'd before he had made his Vow. The Letters which follow this Hiſtory will inform us after what Manner and with what Reſolution they ſeparated. Heloiſe in the Twenty Second Year of her Age generouſly quitted the World, and renounced all thoſe Pleaſures ſhe might reaſonably have promis'd her ſelf, to Sacrifice her ſelf entirely to the Fidelity and Obedience ſhe owed her Husband, and to procure him that that Eaſe of Mind which he ſaid he could no other ways hope for.

TIME making Abelard's Misfortune familiar to him, he now entertain'd Thoughts of Ambition, and of ſupporting the Reputation he had gained of the moſt learned Man of the Age. He began with explaining the Acts of the Apoſtles to the Monks of the Monaſtery of St. Dennis, to which he had retired; but the Diſorders of this Abby, and the Debauches of the Abbot, which, equally with his Dignity, were ſuperior to thoſe of the ſimple Monks, quickly drove him thence. He had made himſelf uneaſy to them, by cenſuring their Irregularity. They were glad to part with him, and he to leave them.

AS ſoon as he had obtain'd leave of the Abbot, he retired to Thibaud in Champain, where he ſet up a School, perſuading himſelf that his Reputation would bring him a great number of Scholars. And indeed they flock'd to him, not only from the moſt diſtant Provinces of France, but alſo from Rome, Spain, England and Germany, in ſuch Numbers that the Towns could not provide Accommodation, nor the Country Proviſions enough for them *. But Abelard did not foreſee that this Succeſs and Reputation would at the ſame time occaſion him new Troubles. He had made himſelf two conſiderable Enemies at Laon, Alberick of Rheims, and Lotulf of Lombardy, who, as ſoon as they perceived how prejudicial his Reputation was to their Schools, ſought all Occaſions to ruin him; and thought they had a lucky Handle to do ſo from a Book of his entitled The Myſtery of the Trinity; this they pretended was Heretical, and through the Archbiſhop's Means they procured a Council at Soiſons in the Year 1121; and without ſuffering Abelard to make any Defence, ordered his Book to be burnt by his own Hands, and himſelf to be confined to the Convent of St. Medard. This Sentence gave him ſuch Grief, that he ſays himſelf the unhappy Fate of his Writings touched him more ſenſibly than the Misfortune he had ſuffer'd thro' Fulbert's Means. Nor was it only his Fatherly Concern for his own Productions, but the indelible Mark of Hereſie which by this Means was fix'd on him, which ſo exceedingly troubled him.

THAT the curious Reader may have a compleat Knowledge of this Matter, I ſhall here give an Account of that pretended Hereſie which was imputed to Abelard. The Occaſion of his Writing this Book was, that his Scholars demanded * Philoſophical Arguments on that Subject; often urging that it was impoſſible to Believe what was not Underſtood; That it was to abuſe the World to Preach a Doctrine, equally unintelligible to the Speaker and Auditor; and that it was for the Blind to lead the Blind. Theſe young Men were certainly inclined to Sabelliniſm. Abelard's Enemies however did not accuſe him of falling into this, but another Hereſie as bad, Tritheiſm, though indeed he was equally free from both; he explained the Unity of the Godhead by Compariſons drawn from Human Things, but according to a Paſſage of St. Bernard, † one of his greateſt Enemies, he ſeemed to hold that no one ought to believe what he could not give a Reaſon for. However, Abelard's Treatiſe upon this Subject pleaſed every one except thoſe of his own Profeſſion, who, ſtung with Envy, that he ſhould find out Explanations which they could not have thought of, raiſed ſuch a cry of Hereſie upon him, that he and ſome of his Scholars had like to have been ſtoned ‡ by the Mob. By their powerful Cabals they prevailed with Conan Biſhop of Preneſte the Pope's Legate, who was Preſident of the Council, to condemn his Book, pretending that he aſſerted three Gods, which they might eaſily ſuggeſt, when he was ſuffer'd to make no Defence. ſtrine of the Trinity; and all this Proceſs againſt him was only occaſioned by the Malice of his Enemies. His Logical Compariſon (and Logick was his Maſter-piece) proved rather the three Divine Perſons One, than multiply'd the Divine Nature into three. His Compariſon is, that as the three Propoſitions * in a Syllogiſm are but one Truth, ſo the Father, Son and Holy Ghoſt are but one Eſſence. And 'tis certain the Inconveniences which may be drawn from this Parallel are not more than what may be drawn from the Compariſon of the three Dimenſions of Solids, ſo much inſiſted on by that famous Orthodox Mathematician Dr. Wallis of England. But great Numbers of Pious and Learned Divines, who have not been over-ſubtle in Politicks, have been perſecuted and condemned as well as Abelard, by the Ignorance and Malice of their caballing Brethren.

A little after his Condemnation, Abelard was ordered to return to St. Dennis. The Liberty he had taken to cenſure the vitious Lives of the Monks had raiſed him a great many Enemies. Among theſe was St. Bernard, not upon the ſame Motives as thoſe Monks, but becauſe Abelard's great Wit, join'd with ſo looſe and ſenſual a Life, gave him Jealouſie, who thought it impoſſible the Heart ſhould be defiled without the Head being likewiſe tainted.

SCARCE had he return'd to St. Dennis, when one Day he dropt ſome Words, intimating he did not believe that the St. Dennis their Patron was the Areopagite mention'd in the Scripture, there being no Probability that he ever was in France. This was immediately carry'd to the Abbot, who was full of Joy, that he had now a Handle to heighten the Accuſations of Hereſie againſt him with ſome Crime againſt the State; a Method frequently uſed by this ſort of Gentlemen to make ſure their Revenge. In thoſe Times too the contradicting the Notions of the Monks was enough to prove a Man an Atheiſt, Heretick, Heretick, Rebel, or any thing: Learning ſignify'd nothing. If any one of a clearer Head and larger Capacity had the Misfortune to be ſuſpected of Novelty, there was no way to avoid the general Perſecution of the Monks, but voluntarily baniſhing himſelf. The Abbot immediately aſſembled all the Houſe, and declared he would deliver up to the ſecular Power a Perſon who had dar'd to reflect upon the Honour of the Kingdom and of the Crown. Abelard very rightly judging that ſuch Threatnings were not to be deſpiſed, fled by Night to Champain, to a Cloyſter of the Monks of Troies, and there patiently waited till the Storm ſhould be over. After the Death of his Abbot, which, very luckily for him, hapned ſoon after his Flight, he obtained Leave to live where he pleaſed, tho' it was not without uſing ſome Cunning. He knew the Monks of ſo rich a Houſe had fallen into great Exceſſes, and were very obnoxious to the Court, who would not fail to make their Profit of it: He therefore procured it ſhould be repreſented to the Council, as very Diſadvantageous to his Majeſty's Intereſt, that a Perſon who was continually cenſuring the Lives of his Brethren ſhould continue any longer with them. This was immediately underſtood, and Orders given to ſome great Man at Court to demand of the Abbot and Monks, why they kept a Perſon in their Houſe whoſe Conduct was ſo diſagreeable to them, and far from being an Ornament to the Society was a continual Vexation, by publiſhing their Faults? This being very opportunely moved to the new Abbot, he gave Abelard leave to retire to what Cloiſter he pleaſed.

ABELARD, who had indeed all the Qualities which make a great Man, could not however bear, without repining, the numerous Misfortunes with which he ſaw himſelf embarraſs'd, and had frequent Thoughts of publiſhing a Manifeſto to juſtify himſelf from the ſcandalous Imputations his Enemies had laid upon him, and to undeceive thoſe whom their Malice had prejudiced againſt him. But upon cooler Thoughts, he determined that it was better to ſay nothing, and to ſhew them by his Silence how unworthy he thought them of his Anger. Thus being rather enraged than than troubled at the Injuries he had ſuffered, he reſolved to found a new Society conſiſting chiefly of Monks. To this purpoſe he choſe a Solitude in the Dioceſe of Troies, and upon ſome Ground which was given him by Permiſſion of the Biſhop, he built a little Houſe, and a Chappel, which he dedicated to the Moſt Holy Trinity.

MEN of Learning were then ſcarce, and the Deſire of Science was beginning to ſpread itſelf. Our Exile was inquired after and found, Scholars crowded to him from all Parts: They built little Hutts, and were very liberal to their Maſter for his Lectures; content to live on Herbs, and Roots and Water, that they might have the Advantage of Learning from ſo Extraordinary a Man; and with great Zeal they enlarged the Chappel, building that and their Profeſſor's Houſe with Wood and Stone.

UPON this occaſion, Abelard, to continue the Memory of the Comfort he had received in this Deſart, dedicated his New-built Chappel to the Holy Ghoſt, by the Name of the Paraclete or Comforter. The Envy of Alberic and Lotul, which had long ſince ſince perſecuted him, was ſtrangely reviv-ed, upon ſeeing ſo many Scholars flock to him from all Parts, notwithſtanding the In-conveniences of the Place, and in con-tempt of the Maſters who might ſo com-modiouſly have been found in the Towns and Cities.

THEY now more than ever ſought Oc-caſions to trouble him; the Name of Pa-raclet furniſh'd them with one; they gave out that this Novelty was a Conſequence of his former Hereſie, and that it was no more lawful to dedicate Churches to the Holy Ghoſt, than to God the Father: That this Title was a ſubtle Art of inſtil-ling that Poiſon which he durſt not ſpread openly; and a Conſequence of his Hereti-cal Doctrine which had been condemned already by a Council. This Report raiſed a great Clamour among Numbers of People, whom his Enemies employ'd from all Sides. But the Perſecution grew more terrible when St. Barnard and St. Norbet declared againſt him, two great Zealots, fir'd with the Spirit of Reformation, and who de-clared themſelves Reſtorers of the Primitive Diſcipline, and had wonderfully gain'd upon the Affections of the Populace. They ſpread ſuch Scandal againſt him, that they prejudiced his Principal Friends, and forced thoſe who ſtill loved him not to ſhew it any ways, and upon theſe Accounts made his Life ſo bitter to him that he was upon the Point of leaving Chriſtendom *. But his Unhappineſs would not let him do a thing which might have procured his Eaſe; but made him ſtill continue with Chriſtians, and with Monks (as himſelf expreſſes it) worſe than Heathens ‡.

THE Duke of Britany, informed of his Misfortunes, and of the Barbarity of his Enemies, named him to the Abby of St. Guildas in the Dioceſe of Vannes, at the deſire of the Monks, who had already elected him for their Superior. Here he thought he had found a Refuge from the Rage of his Enemies, but in Reality he had only chang'd one Trouble for another. The profligate Lives of the Monks, and the Arbitrarineſs of a Lord, who had deprived them of the greater Part of their Revenues, ſo that they were obliged to maintain their Miſtreſſes and Children at their own private Expence, occaſioned him a thouſand Vexations and Dangers. They ſeveral Times endeavour'd to Poiſon him in his ordinary Diet, but proving unſucceſsful that way they try'd to do it in the Holy Sacrament. Excommunications, with which he threaten'd the moſt mutinous, did not at all abate the Diſorder; he now feared the Poniard more than Poiſon, and compared his Caſe to His whom the Tyrant of Syracuſe cauſed to be ſeated at his Table, with a Sword hanging over him faſten'd only by a Thread.

WHILST Abelard thus ſuffer'd in his Abby by his Monks; the Nuns of Argenteuil, of whom Heloiſe was Prioreſs, grew ſo licentious, that Sugger Abbot of St. Dennis taking Advantage of their Irregularities, got Poſſeſſion of their Monaſtery. He ſent the Original Writings to Rome, and having obtain'd the Anſwer he deſired, he expel-expelled the Nuns, and eſtabliſh'd in their Place Monks of his Order.

SOME cenſorious People upon reading this Paſſage will be apt to entertain ſtrong Suſpicions of Heloiſe; and judge it probable that a Governor does not behave well, when Diſſoluteneſs is known to reign in the Society. I have never read that ſhe was included by Name in the general Scandal of the Society, and therefore am cautious not to bring any Accuſations againſt her. Our Saviour ſays, No one hath condemn'd Thee, neither do I condemn Thee.

HELOISE, at her Departure from the Convent of Argenteuil, apply'd to her Husband; who, by Permiſſion of the Biſhop of Troies, gave her the Houſe and Chappel of the Paraclete, with its Appendages; and placing there ſome Nuns, founded a Nunnery. Pope Innocent II. confirmed this Donation in the Year 1131. This is the Origin of the Abby of the Paraclete, of which Heloiſe was the firſt Abbeſs. Whatever her Conduct was among the licentious Nuns of Agenteuil, 'tis certain ſhe lived ſo regular in this her new and laſt Retreat, and behaved herſelf with that that Prudence, Zeal and Piety, that she won the Hearts of all the World, and in a small time had abundance of Donations. Abelard himself says, she had more in one Year, than he could have expected in all his Life, had he lived there. The Bishops loved her as their Child, the Abbesses as their Sister, and the World as their Mother. It must be owned some Women have had wonderful Talents for exciting Christian Charity. The Abbesses which succeeded Heloise have often been of the greatest Families in the Kingdom. There is a List of them in the Notes of Andrew du Chene upon Abelard's Works, from the Time of the Foundation in 1130, to 1615, but he has not thought fit to take notice of Jane Chabot, who dy'd the 25th of June 1593, and profess'd the Protestant Religion, yet without marrying, or quitting her Habit, tho' she was driven from her Abby.

AFTER Abelard had settled Heloise here, he made frequent Journeys from Britany to Champain, to take Care of the Interests of this rising House, and to ease himself from the Vexations of his own Abby.

Abby. But Slander ſo perpetually follow-ed this unhappy Man, that tho' his preſent Condition was univerſally known, he was reproach'd with a remaining voluptuous Paſſion for his former Miſtreſs. He com-plains of his hard Uſage in one of his Let-ters; but comforts himſelf by the Example of St. Jerom, whoſe Friendſhip with Paula occaſion'd Scandal too; and thought he entirely confuted their Calumny, by re-marking that even the moſt Jealous com-mit their Wives to the Cuſtody of Eu-nuchs.

THE thing which gives the greateſt Handle to ſuſpect Heloiſe's Prudence, and that Abelard did not think himſelf ſafe with her, is his making a Reſolution to ſeparate himſelf for ever from her. Du-ring his being employ'd in eſtabliſhing this new Nunnery, and in ordering their Af-fairs, as well Temporal as Spiritual, he was diligent in perſuading her by frequent and pious Admonitions to ſuch a Separation; and inſiſted that in order to make their Retirement and Penitence more profita-ble, it was abſolutely Neceſſary they ſhould ſeriouſly endeavour to forget each other, other, and for the future think of nothing but God. When he had given her Direction for her own Conduct, and Rules for the Management of the Nuns, he took his last Leave of her and return'd to his Abby in Britany, where he continued a long time without her hearing any Mention of him.

BY chance a Letter he wrote to one of his Friends to comfort him under some Disgraces, wherein he had given him a long Account of all the Persecutions he himself had suffer'd, fell into Heloise's Hands. She knew by the Superscription from whom it came, and her Curiosity made her open it; the reading the Particulars of a Story she was so much concern'd in renew'd all her Passion, and she hence took an Occasion to write to him, complaining of his long Silence. Abelard could not forbear answering her; this occasion'd the several Letters between them which follow this History; and in these we may observe how high a Woman is capable of raising the Sentiments of her Heart, when possess'd of a great deal of Wit and Learning, as well as a most violent Love.

I ſhall not tire the Reader with any further Reflections on the Letters of theſe two Lovers, but leave them entirely to his own Judgment; only remarking, that he ought not to be ſurpriſed to find Heloiſe's more Tender, Paſſionate and Expreſſive than thoſe of Abelard: She was Younger, and conſequently more Ardent than he. The ſad Condition he was in had not altered her Love. Beſides, ſhe retired only in Complaiſance to a Man ſhe blindly yielded to; and reſolving to preſerve her Fidelity inviolable, ſhe ſtrove to conquer her Deſires, and make a Virtue of Neceſſity. But the Weakneſs of her Sex continually returned, and ſhe felt the Force of Love in ſpite of all Reſiſtance. It was not the ſame with Abelard; for tho' it was a Miſtake to think, that by not being in a Condition of ſatisfying his Paſſion, he was, as Heloiſe imagined, wholly deliver'd from the Thorn of Senſuality; yet he was truly ſorry for the Diſorders of his paſt Life, he was ſincerely Penitent, and therefore his Letters are leſs Violent and Paſſionate than thoſe of Heloiſe.

ABOUT Ten Years after Abelard had retired to his Abby, where Study was his chief Buſineſs, his Enemies, who had reſolved to Perſecute him to the laſt, were careful not to let him enjoy the Eaſe of Retirement: They thought he was not ſufficiently plagued with his Monks, and therefore brought a new Proceſs of Hereſy againſt him before the Archbiſhop of Sens. He deſired he might have the Liberty of defending his Doctrine before a publick Aſſembly, and it was granted him. Upon this Account the Council of Sens was Aſſembled, in which Louis the VIIth aſſiſted in Perſon, in the Year 1140. St. Bernard was the Accuſer, and delivered to the Aſſembly ſome Propoſitions drawn from Abelard's Book, which were read in the Council. This Accuſation gave Abelard ſuch Fears, and was managed with ſuch inveterate Malice by his Enemies, and with ſuch great Unfairneſs in drawing Conſequences he never thought of; that imagining he had Friends at Rome who would protect his Innocence, he made an Appeal to the Pope. The Council, notwithſtanding his Appeal, condemn'd his Book, but did not meddle with his Perſon; and gave an Account of the whole Proceeding to Pope Innocent II; praying him to confirm their Sentence. St. Bernard had been ſo early in prepoſſeſſing the Pontiff, that he got the Sentence confirmed before Abelard heard any thing of it, or had any Time to preſent himſelf before the Tribunal, to which he had appealed. His Holineſs ordered beſides, that Abelard's Books ſhould be burnt, himſelf confined, and for ever prohibited from Teaching.

THIS Paſſage of St. Bernard's Life is not much for the Honour of his Memory: And whether he took the Trouble himſelf to extract the condemn'd Propoſitions from Abelard's Works, or intruſted it to another Hand, 'tis certain the Paper he gave in contain'd many things which Abelard never wrote, and others which he did not mean in the Senſe imputed to him.

WHEN a few particular Expreſſions are urged too rigidly, and unthought-of Conſequences drawn from ſome Aſſertions, and no Regard is had to the general Intent and Scope of an Author, it is no difficult Matter to find Errors in any Book. For this this Reaſon Beranger of Poitiers, Abelard's Scholar, defended his Maſter againſt St. Bernard, telling him, he ought not to Perſecute others, whoſe own Writings were not exempt from Errors; demonſtrating that he himſelf had advanced a Poſition, which he would not have fail'd to have inſerted in his Extract as a monſtrous Doctrine, if he had found it in the Writings of Abelard.

SOME time after Abelard's Condemnation, the Pope was appeaſed at the Solicitation of the Abbot of Clugni, who received this unfortunate Gentleman in his Monaſtery with great Humanity, reconcil'd him with St. Bernard, and admitted him to be a Religious of his Society.

THIS was Abelard's laſt Retirement, in which he found all manner of Kindneſs; he read Lectures to the Monks, and was equally humble and laborious. At laſt growing weak, and afflicted with a Complication of Diſeaſes, he was ſent to the Priory of St. Marcel upon the Saone, near Chalons, a very agreeable Place, where he dy'd the 21ſt of April, 1142, in the 63d Year of his Age. FRANCIS D'Amboiſe tells us, how ſubtilly one Day ſhe ſatisfy'd St. Bernard, upon his asking her, why in her Abbey when they recited the Lord's Prayer, they did not ſay, Give us this Day our DAILY Bread, but Give us this Day our SUPER-SUBSTANTIAL Bread, by an Argument drawn from the Originals, affirming we ought to follow the Greek Verſion of the Goſpel St. Matthew wrote in Hebrew. Without doubt it was not a little ſurpriſing to St. Bernard, to hear a Woman poſe him in a Controverſy, by citing a Greek Text. 'Tis true, ſome Authors ſay Abelard made this Anſwer to St. Bernard, after hearing from Heloiſe, that Objections were made to that Form of Prayer. However the Caſe was, a Woman with a ſmall competency of Learning, might in thoſe times paſs for a Miracle; and tho' ſhe might not equal thoſe Deſcriptions which have been given of her, yet ſhe may deſervedly be placed in the Rank of Women of the greateſt Learning. Nor was ſhe leſs remarkable for her Piety, Patience, and Reſignation, during her Sickneſſes in the latter part of her Life. She dy'd the 17th of May, 1163. 'Tis ſaid ſhe deſired to be buried in the ſame Tomb with her Abelard, tho' that probably was not executed. Francis D'Amboiſe ſays, he ſaw at the Convent the Tombs of the Founder and Foundreſs near together. However, a Manuſcript of Tours gives us an Account of an extraordinary Miracle which happened when Abelard's Grave was opened for Heloiſe's Body, namely, that Abelard ſtretched out his Arms to receive her, and embraced her cloſely; tho' there were twenty good Years paſs'd ſince he dy'd. But that is a ſmall matter to a Writer of Miracles.

I ſhall conclude this Hiſtory with an Epitaph on Abelard, which the Abbot of Clugni ſent Heloiſe, and which is now to be read on his Tomb; it hath nothing in it delicate either for Thought or Language, and will ſcarcely bear a Tranſlation. It is only added here for the ſake of the Curious, and as an Inſtance of the Reſpect paid to the Memory of ſo great a Man, and one whom Envy had loaded with the greateſt Defamations.

LETTER I.

ABELARD to PHILINTUS.

It may be proper to acquaint the Reader that the following Letter was written by Abelard to a Friend, to comfort him under ſome Afflictions which had befallen him, by a Recital of his own Sufferings, which had been much heavier. It contains a particular Account of his Amour with Heloiſe, and the unhappy Conſequences of it. This Letter was written ſeveral Years after Abelard's Separation from Heloiſe.

THE laſt time we were together, Philintus, you gave me a melancholy Account of your Misfortunes; I was ſenſibly touched with the Relation, and like a true Friend bore a Share in your Griefs.

What did I not ſay to ſtop your Tears? I laid before you all the Reaſons Philoſophy could furniſh, which I thought might any ways ſoften the Strokes of Fortune: But all theſe Endeavours have proved uſeleſs: Grief I perceive has wholly ſeized your Spirits; and your Prudence, far from aſſiſting, ſeems quite to have forſaken you. But my skilful Friendſhip has found out an Expedient to relieve you. Attend to me a Moment, hear but the Story of my Misfortunes; and yours, Philintus, will be nothing, if you compare them with thoſe of the Loving and Unhappy Abelard. Obſerve, I beſeech you, at what Expence I endeavour to ſerve you; and think this no ſmall Mark of my Affection; for I am going to preſent you with the Relation of ſuch Particulars as it is impoſſible for me to recollect without piercing my Heart with the moſt ſenſible Affliction.

You know the Place where I was born, but not perhaps that I was born with thoſe complexional Faults which Strangers charge upon our Nation, an extreme Lightneſs of Temper, and great Inconſtancy. I frankly own it, and ſhall be as free to acquaint quaint you with thoſe good Qualities which were obſerv'd in me. I had a natural Vivacity and Aptneſs for all the Polite Arts. My Father was a Gentleman, and a Man of good Parts; he loved the Wars, but differ'd in his Sentiments from many who follow that Profeſſion. He thought it no Praiſe to be illiterate; but in the Camp he knew how to converſe at the ſame time with the Muſes and Bellona. He was the ſame in the Management of his Family, and took equal Care to form his Children to the Study of Polite Learning, as to their Military Exerciſes. As I was his eldeſt and conſequently his favourite Son, he took more than ordinary Care of my Education. I had a natural Genius to Study, and made an extraordinary Progreſs in it. Smitten with the Love of Books, and the Praiſes which on all Sides were beſtow'd upon me, I aſpir'd to no Reputation, but what proceeded from Learning. To my Brothers I left the Glory of Battels, and the Pomp of Triumphs; nay more, I yielded them up my Birthright and Patrimony. I knew Neceſſity was the great Spur to Study, and was afraid I ſhould not merit

the Title of Learned, if I distinguished myself from others by nothing but a more plentiful Fortune. Of all the Sciences, Logick was the most to my Taste. Such were the Arms I chose to profess. Furnish'd with the Weapons of Reasoning, I took Pleasure in going to publick Disputations, to win Trophies; and where-ever I heard that this Art flourish'd, I rang'd, like another Alexander, from Province to Province, to seek new Adversaries, with whom I might try my Strength.

The Ambition I had to become formidable in Logick led me at last to Paris, the Center of Politeness, and where the Science I was so smitten with, had usually been in the greatest Perfection. I put my self under the Direction of one Champeaux a Professor, who had acquired the Character of the most skilful Philosopher of his Age, by negative Excellencies only, by being the least Ignorant. He received me with great Demonstrations of Kindness, but I was not so Happy as to please him long: I was too knowing in the Subjects he discourse upon; I often confuted his Notions; often in our Disputations tations I push'd a good Argument so home, that all his Subtilty was not able to elude its Force. It was impossible he should see himself surpassed by his Scholar without Resentment. It is sometimes dangerous to have too much Merit.

Envy increased against me proportionably to my Reputation. My Enemies endeavoured to interrupt my Progress, but their Malice only provok'd my Courage. And measuring my Abilities by the Jealousie I had raised, I thought I had no farther Occasion for Champeaux's Lectures, but rather that I was sufficiently qualified to read to others. I stood for a Place which was Vacant at Melun. My Master used all his Artifice to defeat my Hopes, but in vain; and on this Occasion, I triumphed over his Cunning, as before I had done over his Learning. My Lectures were always crouded, and my Beginnings so fortunate, that I entirely obscured the Renown of my famous Master. Flushed with these happy Conquests, I removed to Corbeil, to attack the Masters there, and so establish my Character of the ablest Logician. The Violence of Travelling threw me into

to a dangerous Distemper, and not being able to recover my Strength, my Physicians, who perhaps were in a League with Champeaux, advised me to remove to my Native Air. Thus I voluntarily banished myself for some Years. I leave you to imagine whether my Absence was not regretted by the better Sort. At length I recover'd my Health, when I received News that my greatest Adversary had taken the Habit of a Monk; you may think it was an Act of Penitence for having persecuted me; quite contrary, 'twas Ambition; he resolved to raise himself to some Church Dignity, therefore fell into the beaten Track, and took on him the Garb of feign'd Austerity; for this is the easiest and shortest way to the highest Ecclesiastical Dignities. His Wishes were successful, and he obtain'd a Bishoprick: Yet did he not quit Paris, and the Care of the Schools: He went to his Diocese to gather in his Revenues, but return'd and pass'd the rest of his time in reading Lectures to those few Pupils which followed him. After this I often engaged with him, and may reply to you as Ajax did to the Greeks;

About this time my Father Beranger, who to the Age of Sixty had lived very agreeably, retired from the World, and ſhut himſelf up in a Cloiſter, where he offer'd up to Heaven the languid Remains of a Life, he could make no further uſe of. My Mother, who was yet young, took the ſame Reſolution. She turn'd a Religious, but did not entirely abandon the Satisfactions of Life. Her Friends were continually at the Grate. And the Monaſtery, when one has an Inclination to make it ſo, is exceeding Charming and Pleaſant. I was preſent when my Mother was profeſs'd. At my Return I reſolv'd to ſtudy Divinity, and inquir'd for a Director in that Study. I was recommended to one Anſelm, the very Oracle of his Time; but to give you my own Opinion, one more venerable for his Age and Wrinkles, than for his Genius or Learning. If you conſulted him upon any Difficulty, the ſure Conſequence was to be much much more uncertain in the Point. They who only saw him admir'd him, but those who reason'd with him were extremely dissatisfied. He was a great Master of Words, and talk'd much, but meant nothing. His Discourse was a Fire, which instead of enlightning obscured every thing with its Smoke; a Tree beautified with Variety of Leaves and Branches, but barren. I came to him with a desire to Learn, but found him like the Fig-tree in the Gospel, or the old Oak to which Lucan compares Pompey. I continued not long underneath his Shadow. I took for my Guides the Primitive Fathers, and boldly launch'd into the Ocean of the Holy Scriptures. In a short time I made such a Progress that others chose me for their Director. The Number of my Scholars were incredible, and the Gratuities I received from them were answerable to the great Reputation I had acquired. Now I found myself safe in the Harbour, the Storms were pass'd, and the Rage of my Enemies had spent it self without Effect. Happy, had I known to make a right use of this Calm! But when the Mind is most easie 'tis most exposed.

pos'd to Love, and even Security here is the moſt dangerous State.

And now, my Friend, I am going to expoſe to you all my Weakneſſes. All Men, I believe, are under a Neceſſity of paying Tribute, at ſome Time or other, to Love, and it is vain to ſtrive to avoid it. I was a Philoſopher, yet this Tyrant of the Mind triumph'd over all my Wiſdom; his Darts were of greater Force than all my Reaſonings, and with a ſweet Conſtraint he led me whither he pleas'd. Heav'n, amidſt an abundance of Bleſſings with which I was intoxicated, threw in a heavy Affliction. I became a moſt ſignal Example of its Vengeance; and the more unhappy, becauſe having deprived me of the Means of accompliſhing my Satisfaction, it left me to the Fury of my Criminal Deſires. I will tell you, my dear Friend, the Particulars of my Story, and leave you to judge whether I deſerved ſo ſevere a Correction.

I had always an Averſion for thoſe light Women, whom 'tis a Reproach to purſue; I was ambitious in my Choice, and wiſh'd to find ſome Obſtacles, that I might ſurmount mount them with the greater Glory and Pleasure.

THERE was in Paris a young Creature (ah Philintus!) formed in a Prodigality of Nature, to shew Mankind a finish'd Composition; dear Heloise! the reputed Neice of one Fulbert, a Canon. Her Wit and her Beauty would have fir'd the dullest and most insensible Heart; and her Education was equally admirable. Heloise was a Mistress of the most Polite Arts. You may easily imagine, that this did not a little help to captivate me: I saw her, I lov'd her, I resolv'd to endeavour to engage her Affections. The Thirst of Glory cool'd immediately in my Heart, and all my Passions were lost in this new one. I thought of nothing but Heloise; every thing brought her Image to my Mind. I was pensive, restless, and my Passion was so violent as to admit of no Restraint. I was always vain and presumptive; I flatter'd myself already with the most bewitching Hopes. My Reputation had spread itself every where; and could a virtuous Lady resist a Man that had confounded all the Learned of the Age? I was young —— cou'd she shew an In-ſenſibility to thoſe Vows which my Heart never formed for any but herſelf? My Perſon was advantageous enough, and by my Dreſs no one would have ſuſpected me for a Doctor; and Dreſs, you know, is not a little engaging with Women. Beſides, I had Wit enough to write a Billet-doux, and hoped, if ever ſhe permitted my abſent ſelf to entertain her, ſhe would read with Pleaſure thoſe Breathings of my Heart.

FILL'D with theſe Notions, I thought of nothing but the Means to ſpeak to her. Lovers either find or make all things eaſie. By the Offices of common Friends, I gain'd the Acquaintance of Fulbert. And can you believe it, Philintus, he allow'd me the Privilege of his Table, and an Apartment in his Houſe: I paid him indeed a conſiderable Sum, for Perſons of his Character do nothing without Money. But what would I not have given? You, my dear Friend, know what Love is; imagine then what a Pleaſure it muſt have been to a Heart ſo inflam'd as mine, to be always ſo near the dear Object of Deſire! I would not have exchang'd my happy Condition dition for that of the greateſt Monarch upon Earth. I ſaw Heloiſe, I ſpoke to her, ——— each Action, each confuſed Look, told her the Trouble of my Soul. And ſhe, on the other ſide, gave me ground to hope for every thing from her Generoſity. Fulbert deſir'd me to inſtruct her in Philoſophy; by this means I found Opportunities of being in private with her, and yet I was ſure of all Men the moſt timorous in declaring my Paſſion.

As I was with her one Day alone, Charming Heloiſe, ſaid I bluſhing, if you know yourſelf, you will not be ſurprized with that Paſſion you have inſpired me with. Uncommon as it is, I can expreſs it but with the common Terms —— I love you, adorable Heloiſe! 'Till now I thought Philoſophy made us Maſters of all our Paſſions, and that it was a Refuge from the Storms in which weak Mortals are toſs'd and ſhip-wreck'd: But you have deſtroy'd my Security, and broken this Philoſophic Courage. I have deſpis'd Riches; Honour and its Pageantries could never raiſe a weak Thought in me: Beauty alone has fir'd my Soul; happy if ſhe who raiſed this this Paſſion, kindly receives the Declaration; but if it is an Offence —— No, replied Heloiſe; ſhe muſt be very ignorant of your Merit, who can be offended at your Paſſion. But for my ownRepoſe, I wiſh either that you had not made this Declaration, or that I were at liberty not to ſuſpect your Sincerity. Ah Divine Heloiſe, ſaid I, flinging myſelf at her Feet, I ſwear by yourſelf —— I was going on to convince her of the Truth of my Paſſion, but heard a Noiſe, and it was Fulbert: There was no avoiding it, but I muſt do a violence to my Deſire, and change the Diſcourſe to ſome other Subject. After this, I found frequent Opportunities to free Heloiſe from thoſe Suſpicions, which the general Inſincerity of Men had raiſed in her; and ſhe too much deſired what I ſaid were Truth, not to believe it. Thus there was a moſt happy Underſtanding between us. The ſame Houſe, the ſame Love, united our Perſons and our Deſires. How many ſoft Moments did we paſs together? We took all Opportunities to expreſs to each other our mutual Affections, and were ingenious in contriving Incidents which might might give us a plausible Occasion of meeting. Pyramis and Thisbe's Discovery of the Crack in the Wall, was but a slight Representation of our Love and its Sagacity. In the dead of Night, when Fulbert and his Domesticks were in a sound Sleep, we improved the Time, proper to the sweet Thefts of Love: Not contenting ourselves, like those unfortunate Lovers, with giving insipid Kisses to a Wall, we made use of all the Moments of our charming Interviews. In the Place where we met we had no Lions to fear, and the Study of Philosophy serv'd us for a Blind. But I was so far from making any Advances in the Sciences, that I lost all my Taste of them; and when I was obliged to go from the Sight of my dear Mistress to my Philosophical Exercises, 'twas with the utmost Regret and Melancholy. Love is incapable of being concealed; a Word, a Look, nay Silence speaks it. My Scholars discover'd it first; they saw I had no longer that Vivacity of Thought to which all things were easie: I could now do nothing but write Verses to sooth my Passion: I quitted Aristotle and his dry Maxims, to practise practiſe the Precepts of the more ingenious Ovid. No Day paſs'd in which I did not compoſe Amorous Verſes. Love was my inſpiring Apollo. My Songs were ſpread abroad, and gained me frequent Applauſes. Thoſe who were in Love as I was, took a Pride in learning them; and by luckily applying my Thoughts and Verſes, have obtain'd Favours, which perhaps they cou'd not otherwiſe have gained: This gave our Amours ſuch an Eclat, that the Loves of Heloiſe and Abelard were the Subject of all Converſations.

THE Town-talk at laſt reach'd Fulbert's Ears; it was with great difficulty he gave Credit to what he heard, for he loved his Neice, and was prejudiced in my Favour; but upon cloſer Examination, he began to be leſs incredulous. He ſurpriſed us in one of our more ſoft Converſations. How fatal ſometimes are the Conſequences of Curioſity! The Anger of Fulbert ſeemed too moderate on this Occaſion, and I fear'd in the End ſome more heavy Revenge. It is impoſſible to expreſs the Grief and Regret which fill'd my Soul, when I was obliged to leave the Canon's Houſe Houſe and my dear Heloiſe. But this Separation of our Perſons the more firmly united our Minds; and the deſperate Condition we were reduced to, made us capable of attempting any thing.

My Intrigues gave me but little Shame, ſo lovingly did I eſteem the Occaſion: Think what the gay young Divinities ſaid, when Vulcan caught Mars and the Goddeſs of Beauty in his Net, and impute it all to me. Fulbert ſurpriz'd me with Heloiſe, and what Man that had a Soul in him would not have born any Ignominy on the ſame Conditions? The next Day I provided myſelf of a private Lodging near the lov'd Houſe, being reſolv'd not to abandon my Prey. I continued ſome time without appearing publickly. Ah how long did thoſe few Moments ſeem to me! When we fall from a State of Happineſs, with what Impatience do we bear our Misfortunes?

It being impoſſible that I could live without ſeeing Heloiſe, I endeavoured to engage her Servant, whoſe Name was Agaton, in my Intereſt; ſhe was brown, well ſhaped, of a Perſon ſuperior to the ordinary nary Rank; her Features regular, and her Eyes ſparkling; fit to raiſe Love in any Man whoſe Heart was not prepoſſeſs'd by another Paſſion. I met her alone, and intreated her to have Pity on a Diſtreſſed Lover. She anſwer'd, ſhe would undertake any thing to ſerve me, but there was a Reward —— at theſe Words I open'd my Purſe, and ſhew'd the ſhining Metal, which lays aſleep Guards, forces a Way thro' Rocks, and ſoftens the Hearts of the moſt obdurate Fair. You are miſtaken, ſaid ſhe, ſmiling and ſhaking her Head —— you do not know me; could Gold tempt me, a Rich Abbot takes his nightly Station, and ſings under my Window; he offers to ſend me to his Abbey, which, he ſays, is ſituate in the moſt pleaſant Country in the World. A Courtier offers me a conſiderable Sum, and aſſures me I need have no Apprehenſions; for if our Amours have Conſequences, he will marry me to his Gentleman, and give him a handſome Employment. To ſay nothing of a young Officer, who patroles about here every Night, and makes his Attacks after all imaginable Forms. It muſt be Love only which could oblige him him to follow me; for I have not, like your great Ladies, any Rings or Jewels to tempt him: Yet during all his Siege of Love, his Feather and his embroider'd Coat have not made any Breach in my Heart: I ſhall not quickly be brought to capitulate, I am too faithful to my firſt Conqueror —— and then ſhe look'd earneſtly on me. I anſwer'd, I did not underſtand her Diſcourſe. She replied, For a Man of Senſe and Gallantry, you have a very ſlow Apprehenſion; I am in Love with you, Abelard; I know you adore Heloiſe, I do not blame you; I deſire only to enjoy the ſecond Place in your Affections: I have a tender Heart, as well as my Miſtreſs; you may without difficulty make Returns to my Paſſion; do not perplex yourſelf with unfaſhionable Scruples: A Prudent Man ought to love ſeveral at the ſame time; if one ſhould fail, he is not then left unprovided.

You cannot imagine, Philintus, how much I was ſurpriz'd at theſe Words; ſo entirely did I love Heloiſe, that without reflecting whether Agaton ſpoke any thing reaſonable or not, I immediately left her.

When I had gone a little way from her, I look'd back, and ſaw her biting her Nails in the Rage of Diſappointment, which made me fear ſome fatal Conſequences. She haſten'd to Fulbert, and told him the Offer I had made her, but I ſuppoſe concealed the other Part of the Story. The Canon never forgave this Affront; I afterwards perceived he was more deeply concern'd for his Neice, than I at firſt imagin'd. Let no Lover hereafter follow my Example: A Woman rejected is an outrageous Creature. Agaton was Day and Night at her Window, on purpoſe to keep me at a diſtance from her Miſtreſs, and ſo gave her own Gallants Opportunity enough to diſplay their ſeveral Abilities.

I was infinitely perplexed what courſe to take, at laſt I apply'd myſelf to my Heloiſe's Singing-maſter. The ſhining Metal, which had no Effect on Agaton, charmed him; he was excellently qualified for conveying a Billet, with the greateſt Dexterity and Secrecy. He deliver'd one of mine to Heloiſe, who, according to my Appointment, was ready at the end of a Garden, the Wall of which I ſcaled by a Ladder of Ropes, I confeſs to you all my Failings, Philintus. How would my Enemies, Champeaux and Anſelm, have triumphed, had they ſeen the redoubted Philoſopher in ſuch a wretched Condition? Well——I met my Soul's Joy, my Heloiſe; I ſhall not deſcribe our Tranſports, they were not long; for the firſt News Heloiſe acquainted me with, plunged me in a thouſand Diſtractions. A floating Delos was to be ſought for, where ſhe might be ſafely delivered of a Burthen ſhe began already to feel. Without loſing much time in debating, I made her preſently quit the Canon's Houſe, and at break of Day depart for Britany; where ſhe, like another Goddeſs, gave the World another Apollo, which my Siſter took care of.

THIS carrying off Heloiſe was ſufficient Revenge upon Fulbert. It fill'd him with the deepeſt Concern, and had like to have deprived him of all the little Share of Wit which Heaven had allowed him. His Sorrow and Lamentation gave the Cenſorious an Occaſion of ſuſpecting him for ſomething more than the Uncle of Heloiſe.

IN ſhort, I began to pity his Misfortune, and to think this Robbery which Love had made me commit was a ſort of Treaſon. I endeavoured to appeaſe his Anger by a ſincere Confeſſion of all that was paſt, and by hearty Engagements to marry Heloiſe ſecretly. He gave me his Conſent, and with many Proteſtations and Embraces confirmed our Reconciliation. But what Dependance can be made on the Word of an ignorant Devotée. He was only plotting a cruel Revenge, as you will ſee by what follows.

I took a Journey into Britany, in order to bring back my dear Heloiſe, whom I now conſider'd as my Wife. When I had acquainted her with what had paſs'd between the Canon and me, I found ſhe was of a contrary Opinion to me. She urged all that was poſſible to divert me from Marriage: That it was a Bond always fatal to a Philoſopher; that the Cries of Children and Cares of a Family were utterly inconſiſtent with the Tranquility and Application which the Study of Philoſophy required. She quoted me to all that was written on the Subject by Theo- phraſtus, Cicero, and above all inſiſted on the Unfortunate Socrates, who quitted Life with Joy, becauſe by that Means he left Xantippe. Will it not be more agreeable to me, ſaid ſhe, to ſee myſelf your Miſtreſs than your Wife? And will not Love have more Power than Marriage to keep our Hearts firmly united? Pleaſures taſted ſparingly and with Difficulty have always a higher Reliſh, while every thing by being eaſie and common grows flat and inſipid.

I was unmoved by all this Reaſoning. Heloiſe prevailed upon my Siſter to engage me. Lucilla (for that was her Name) taking me aſide one Day ſaid, What do you intend, Brother? Is it poſſible that Abelard ſhould in earneſt think of marrying Heloiſe? She ſeems indeed to deſerve a perpetual Affection; Beauty, Youth and Learning, all that can make a Perſon valuable, meet in her. You may adore all this if you pleaſe; but not to flatter you, What is Beauty but a Flower, which may be blaſted by the leaſt Fit of Sickneſs? When thoſe Features with which you have been ſo captivated ſhall be ſunk, and thoſe Graces Graces loſt, you will too late repent that you have entangled yourſelf in a Chain, from which Death only can free you. I ſhall ſee you reduced to the married Man's only Hope of Survivorſhip. Do you think Learning ought to make Heloiſe more amiable? I know ſhe is not one of thoſe affected Females, who are continually oppreſſing you with fine Speeches, criticiſing Books, and deciding upon the Merit of Authors. When ſuch an one is in the Fury of her Diſcourſe, Husband, Friends, Servants, all fly before her. Heloiſe has not this Fault; yet 'tis Troubleſome not to be at Liberty to uſe the leaſt improper Expreſſion before a Wife, which you bear with Pleaſure from a Miſtreſs.

BUT you ſay you are ſure of the Affections of Heloiſe; I believe it; ſhe has given you no ordinary Proofs. But can you be ſure Marriage will not be the Tomb of her Love? The Name of Husband and Maſter are always harſh, and Heloiſe will not be the Phœnix you now think her. Will ſhe not be a Woman? Come, come, the Head of a Philoſopher is leſs ſecure than thoſe of other Men. My Siſter grew warm in the Argument, and was going on to give me a hundred more Reaſons of this kind; but I angrily interrupted her, telling her only, that ſhe did not know Heloiſe.

A few Days after we departed together from Britany, and came to Paris, where I compleated my Project. 'Twas my Intent my Marriage ſhould be keep ſecret, and therefore Heloiſe retired among the Nuns of Argenteuil.

I now thought Fulbert's Anger diſarmed; I lived in Peace; but alas! our Marriage proved but a weak Defence againſt his Revenge. Obſerve, Philintus, to what a Barbarity he purſu'd it! He bribed my Servants; an Aſſaſſin came into my Bedchamber by Night with a Razor in his Hand, and found me in a deep Sleep. I ſuffer'd the moſt ſhameful Puniſhment that the Revenge of an Enemy could invent; in ſhort, without loſing my Life, I loſt my Manhood. I was puniſhed indeed in the offending Part; the Deſire was left me, but not the Poſſibility of ſatisfying the Paſſion. So cruel an Action eſcaped not unpuniſhed; the Villain ſuffer'd the ſame ſame Infliction; poor Comfort for ſo irretrievable an Evil! I confeſs to you, Shame more than any ſincere Penitence made me reſolve to hide myſelf from the Sight of Men, yet could I not ſeparate myſelf from my Heloiſe. Jealouſie took Poſſeſſion of my Mind; and at the very Expence of her Happineſs I decreed to diſappoint all Rivals: Before I put myſelf in a Cloiſter, I oblig'd her to take the Habit, and retire into the Nunnery of Argenteuil. I remember ſome body would have oppoſed her making ſuch a cruel Sacrifice of herſelf, but ſhe anſwered in the Words of Cornelia after the Death of Pompey the Great.

—O Conjux, ego te ſcelerata peremi.
—te fata extrema petente
Vita digna fui? Moriar —— &c.

O my lov'd Lord! our fatal Marriage draws
On thee this Doom, and I the guilty Cauſe!

Speaking theſe Verſes, ſhe marched up to the Altar, and took the Veil with a Conſtancy which I could not have expected in a Woman who had ſo high a Taſte of Pleaſures which ſhe might ſtill enjoy. I bluſhed at my own Weakneſs, and without deliberating a Moment longer, I buried myſelf in a Cloiſter, reſolved to vanquiſh a fruitleſs Paſſion. I now reflected that God had chaſtiſed me thus grievouſly, that he might ſave me from that Deſtruction in which I had like to have been ſwallowed up. In order to avoid Idleneſs, the unhappy Incendiary of thoſe criminal Flames which had ruined me in the World, I endeavoured in my Retirement to put thoſe Talents to a good Uſe which I had before ſo much abuſed. I gave the Novices Rules of Divinity agreeable to the Holy Fathers and Councils. In the mean while the Enemies which my new Fame had raiſed up, and eſpecially Alberic and Lotulf, who, after the Death of their Maſters Champeaux and Anſelm, aſſumed the Sovereignty of Learning, began to attack me. Mortification to ſee my Books condemn'd by a Council, and burnt. This was a cutting Sorrow; and believe me, Philintus, the former Calamity I ſuffer'd by the Cruelty of Fulbert, was nothing in Compariſon to this.

THE Affront I had newly received, and the ſcandalous Debaucheries of the Monks, obliged me to baniſh myſelf, and retire near to Nogent. I liv'd in a Deſart, where I flatter'd myſelf I ſhould avoid Fame, and be ſecure from the Malice of my Enemies. I was again deceived. The Deſire of being taught by me, drew Crouds of Auditors even thither. Many left the Towns and their Houſes, and came and lived in Tents; for Herbs, coarſe Fare, and hard Lodging, they abandoned the Delicacies of a plentiful Table, and eaſie Life. I looked like the Prophet in the Wilderneſs attended by his Diſciples. My Lectures were perfectly clear from all that had been condemn'd. And happy had it been if our Solitude had been inacceſſible to Envy! With the conſiderable Gratuities I received, I built a Chappel, and dedicated it to the Holy Ghoſt, by the Name of the Paraclete.

raclete. The Rage of my Enemies now awaken'd again, and forced me to quit this Retreat. This I did without much Difficulty. But first the Bishop of Troies gave me leave to establish there a Nunnery, which I did, and committed the Care of it to my dear Heloise. When I had settled her here, can you believe it, Philintus, I left her, without taking any Leave. I did not wander long without any settled Habitation; for the Duke of Britany, informed of my Misfortunes, named me to the Abby of St. Guildas, where I now am, and where I suffer every Day fresh Persecutions.

I live in a barbarous Country, the Language of which I don't understand; I have no Conversation but with the rudest People. My Walks are on the inaccessible Shore of a Sea, which is perpetually Stormy. My Monks are only known by their Dissoluteness, and living without any Rule or Order. Could you see the Abby, Philintus, you would not call it one. The Doors and Walls are without any Ornament, except the Heads of wild Boars and Hinds Feet, which are nail'd up against them, and the Hides of frightful Animals. The

The Cells are hung with the Skins of Deer. The Monks have not so much as a Bell to wake them, the Cocks and Dogs supply that Defect. In short, they pass their whole Days in Hunting; would to Heav'n that were their greatest Fault! or that their Pleasures terminated there! I endeavour in vain to recal them to their Duty; they all combine against me, and I only expose myself to continual Vexations and Dangers. I imagine I see every Moment a naked Sword hang over my Head. Sometimes they surround me, and load me with infinite Abuses; sometimes they abandon me, and I am left alone to my own tormenting Thoughts. I make it my Endeavour to merit by my Sufferings, and to appease an angry God. Sometimes I grieve for the Loss of the House of the Paraclete, and wish to see it again. Ah Philintus, does not the Love of Heloise still burn in my Heart? I have not yet triumphed over that unhappy Passion. In the midst of my Retirement I sigh, I weep, I pine, I speak the dear Name Heloise, and am pleas'd to hear the Sound. I complain of the Severity of Heaven. But oh! let us not deceive deceive ourſelves: I have not made a right Uſe of Grace. I am thoroughly wretched. I have not yet torn from my Heart the deep Roots which Vice has planted in it. For if my Converſion were ſincere, how could I take a Pleaſure to relate my paſt Follies? Could I not more eaſily comfort myſelf in my Afflictions, could I not turn to my Advantage thoſe Words of God himſelf, if they have perſecuted me they will alſo perſecute you; if the World hate you, ye know that it hated me alſo? Come Philintus, let us make a ſtrong Effort, turn our Misfortunes to our Advantage, make them meritorious, or at leaſt wipe out our Offences; let us receive without Murmuring what comes from the Hand of God, and let us not oppoſe our Will to his. Adieu. I give you Advice which could I myſelf follow, I ſhould be happy.

LETTER II.

HELOISE to ABELARD.

The foregoing Letter would probably not have produced any others, if it had been deliver'd to the Perſon to whom it was directed; but falling by Accident into Heloiſe's Hands, who knew the Character, ſhe open'd it and read it; and by that means, her former Paſſion being awaken'd, ſhe immediately ſet herſelf to write to her Husband, as follows.

* To her Lord, her Father, her Husband, her Brother; his Servant, his Child, his Wife, his Siſter, and to expreſs all that is Humble, Reſpectful, and Loving, to her Abelard, Heloiſe writes this.

A Conſolatory Letter of yours to a Friend, happen'd ſome Days ſince to fall into my Hands; my Knowledge of the Character, and my Love of the Hand, ſoon gave me the Curioſity to open it: In Juſtification of the Liberty I took, I flatter'd myſelf I might claim a Sovereign Privilege over every Thing which came from you: Nor was I ſcrupulous to break through the Rules of good Breeding, when it was to hear News of Abelard: But how dear did my Curioſity coſt me? What Diſturbance did it occaſion? And how was I ſurpriz'd to find the whole Letter fill'd with a particular and melancholy Account of our Misfortunes? I met with my Name a hundred Times; I never ſaw it without Fear; ſome heavy Calamity always followed it: I ſaw yours too, equally unhappy. Theſe mournful, but dear Remembrances, put my Spirits into ſuch a violent Motion, that I thought it was too much, to offer Comfort to a Friend for a few ſlight Diſgraces, by ſuch extraordinary Means as the Repreſentation of our Sufferings and Revolutions. What Reflections did I not make? I began to conſider the whole afreſh, and perceived myſelf preſſed with the ſame Weight of Grief as when we firſt began to be miſerable. and bleed afreſh. Nothing can ever blot from my Memory what you have ſuffer'd in Defence of your Writings. I cannot help thinking of the rancorous Malice of Alberic and Lotulf. A cruel Uncle, and an injured Lover, will be always preſent to my aking Sight. I ſhall never forget what Enemies your Learning, and what Envy your Glory rais'd againſt you. I ſhall never forget your Reputation, ſo juſtly acquired, torn to pieces, and blaſted by the inexorable Cruelty of half-learned Pretenders to Science. Was not your Treatiſe of Divinity condemned to be burnt? Were you not threatned with perpetual Impriſonment? In vain you urged in your Defence, that your Enemies impoſed on you Opinions quite different from your Meaning: In vain you condemn'd thoſe Opinions; all was of no Effect towards your Juſtification; 'twas reſolv'd you ſhould be a Heretick. of Sens? What Scandals were vented on occaſion of the Name Paraclete given to your Chappel? What a Storm was raiſed againſt you by the treacherous Monks, when you did them the Honour to be call'd their Brother? This Hiſtory of our numerous Misfortunes, related in ſo true and moving a Manner, made my Heart bleed within me: My Tears, which I could not reſtrain, have blotted half your Letter; I wiſh they had effaced the whole, and that I had returned it to you in that Condition; I ſhould then have been ſatisfied with the little Time I kept it; but it was demanded of me too ſoon.

I muſt confeſs I was much eaſier in my Mind before I read your Letter. Sure all the Misfortunes of Lovers are conveyed to them thro' their Eyes. Upon reading your Letter, I felt all mine renew'd. I reproach'd myſelf for having been ſo long without venting my Sorrows, when the Rage of our unrelenting Enemies ſtill burns with the ſame Fury. Since Length of Time, which diſarms the ſtrongeſt Hatred, ſeems but to aggravate theirs; ſince it is decreed that your Virtue ſhall be perſecut-ed 'till it takes Refuge in the Grave, and even beyond that, your Aſhes perhaps will not be ſuffer'd to reſt in Peace; Let me always meditate on your Calamities, let me publiſh them thro' all the World, if poſſible, to ſhame an Age that has not known how to value you. I will ſpare no one, ſince no one would intereſt himſelf to protect you, and your Enemies are never weary of oppreſſing your Innocence. Alas! my Memory is perpetually filled with bitter Remembrances of paſs'd Evils, and are there more to be fear'd ſtill? Shall my Abelard be never mention'd without Tears? Shall the dear Name be never ſpoken but with Sighs? Obſerve, I beſeech you, to what a wretched Condition you have reduced me: Sad, afflicted, without any poſſible Comfort, unleſs it proceed from you. Be not then unkind, nor deny me, I beg you, that little Relief which you only can give. Let me have a faithful Account of all that concerns you. I would know every thing, be it ever ſo unfortunate. Perhaps, by mingling my Sighs with yours, I may make your Sufferings less; if that Observation be true, that all Sorrows divided are made lighter.

TELL me not, by way of Excuse, you will spare our Tears; the Tears of Women shut up in a melancholy Place, and devoted to Penitence, are not to be spar'd. And if you wait for an Opportunity to write pleasant and agreeable Things to us, you will delay Writing too long: Prosperity seldom chuses the Side of the Virtuous; and Fortune is so blind, that in a Croud, in which there is perhaps but one Wise and Brave Man, it is not to be expected she should single him out. Write to me then immediately, and wait not for Miracles; they are too scarce, and we too much accustomed to Misfortunes to expect any happy Turn. I shall always have this, if you please, and this will be always agreeable to me, that when I receive any Letters from you, I shall know you still remember me. Seneca, (with whose Writings you made me acquainted) as much a Stoick as he was, seemed to be so very sensible of this kind of Pleasure, that upon opening any Letters from Lucilius, he imagined gined he felt the ſame Delight as when they converſed together.

I have made it an Obſervation ſince our Abſence, that we are much fonder of the Pictures of thoſe we love, when they are at a great Diſtance, than when they are near to us. It ſeems to me as if the farther they are removed, their Pictures grow the more finiſh'd, and acquire a greater Reſemblance; at leaſt our Imagination, which perpetually figures them to us by the Deſire we have of ſeeing them again, makes us think ſo. By a peculiar Power, Love can make that ſeem Life it ſelf, which as ſoon as the lov'd Object returns, is nothing but a little Canvas and dead Colours. I have your Picture in my Room, I never paſs by it without ſtopping to look at it; and yet when you were preſent with me, I ſcarce ever caſt my Eyes upon it: If a Picture, which is but a mute Repreſentation of an Object, can give ſuch Pleaſure, what cannot Letters inſpire? They have Souls, they can ſpeak, they have in them all that Force which expreſſes the Tranſports of the Heart; they have all the Fire of our Paſſions, they can raiſe them them as much as if the Perſons themſelves were preſent; they have all the Softneſs and Delicacy of Speech, and ſometimes a Boldneſs of Expreſſion even beyond it.

WE may write to each other; ſo innocent a Pleaſure is not forbidden us. Let us not loſe, thro' Negligence, the only Happineſs which is left us, and the only one perhaps which the Malice of our Enemies can never raviſh from us. I ſhall read that you are my Husband, and you ſhall ſee me addreſs you as a Wife. In ſpite of all your Misfortunes, you may be what you pleaſe in your Letter. Letters were firſt invented for comforting ſuch ſolitary Wretches as myſelf. Having loſt the ſubſtantial Pleaſures of ſeeing and poſſeſſing you, I ſhall in ſome meaſure compenſate this Loſs, by the Satisfaction I ſhall find in your Writing. There I ſhall read your moſt ſecret Thoughts; I ſhall carry them always about me, I ſhall kiſs them every Moment; if you can be capable of any Jealouſy, let it be for the fond Careſſes I ſhall beſtow on your Letters, and envy only the Happineſs of thoſe Rivals. That Writing may be no Trouble to you, write always to me careleſly, and without Study: I had rather read the Dictates of the Heart than of the Brain. I cannot live, if you do not tell me you always love me; but that Language ought to be ſo natural to you, that I believe you cannot ſpeak otherwiſe to me, without great Violence to yourſelf. And ſince, by that melancholy Relation to yourFriend, you have awaken'd all my Sorrows, 'tis but reaſonable you ſhould allay them by ſome Marks of an inviolable Love.

I do not however reproach you for the innocent Artifice you made uſe of to comfort a Perſon in Affliction, by comparing his Misfortune to another much greater. Charity is ingenious in finding out ſuch pious Artifices, and to be commended for uſing them. But do you owe nothing more to us than to that Friend, be the Friendſhip between you ever ſo intimate? We are call'd your Siſters; we call our ſelves your Children; and if it were poſſible to think of any Expreſſions which could ſignifie a dearer Relation, or a more affectionate Regard and mutual Obligation between us, we would uſe them: If we could could be ſo ungrateful as not to ſpeak our juſt Acknowledgments to you, this Church, theſe Altars, theſe Walls, would reproach our Silence and ſpeak for us. But without leaving it to that, it will be always a Pleaſure to me to ſay, that you only are the Founder of this Houſe; 'tis wholly your Work. You, by inhabiting here, have given Fame and Sanction to a Place, known before only for Robberies and Murders. You have in the literal Senſe made the Den of Thieves a Houſe of Prayer. Theſe Cloiſters owe nothing to publick Charities; our Walls were not rais'd by the Uſury of Publicans, nor their Foundations laid in baſe Extortion. The God whom we ſerve, ſees nothing but innocent Riches, and harmleſs Votaries, whom you have placed here. Whatever this young Vineyard is, is owing all to you; and it is your Part to imploy your whole Care to cultivate and improve it; this ought to be one of the principal Affairs of your Life. Tho' our Holy Renunciation, our Vows, and our Manner of Life, ſeem to ſecure us from all Temptations; tho' our Walls and Grates prohibit all Approaches, yet 'tis the Out-

Outſide only, the Bark of the Tree, is cover'd from Injuries; while the Sap of Original Corruption may impereceptibly ſpread within, even to the Heart, and prove fatal to the moſt promiſing Plantation, unleſs continual Care be taken to cultivate and ſecure it. Virtue in us is grafted upon Nature and the Woman; the one is weak, and the other is always changeable. To plant the Lord's Vine is a Work of no little Labour; and after it is planted, it will require great Application and Diligence to manure it. The Apoſtle of the Gentiles, as great a Labourer as he was, ſays, he hath planted, and Apollos hath watered, but 'tis God that gives the Increaſe. Paul had planted the Goſpel among the Corinthians, by his holy and earneſt Preaching; Apollos, a zealous Diſciple of that great Maſter, continued to cultivate it by frequent Exhortations; and the Grace of God, which their conſtant Prayers implored for that Church, made the Endeavours of both ſucceſsful.

THIS ought to be an Example for your Conduct towards us. I know you are not ſloathful; yet your Labours are not directed ed to us; your Cares are waſted upon a Set of Men, whoſe Thoughts are only earthly, and you refuſe to reach out your Hand to ſupport thoſe who are weak and ſtaggering, in their Way to Heaven, and who with all their Endeavours can ſcarcely preſerve themſelves from falling. You fling the Pearls of the Goſpel before Swine, when you ſpeak to thoſe who are fill'd with the good Things of this World, and nouriſhed with the Fatneſs of the Earth; and you neglect the innocent Sheep, who, tender as they are, would yet follow you thro' Deſarts and Mountains. Why are ſuch Pains thrown away upon the ungrateful, while not a Thought is beſtowed upon your Children, whoſe Souls would be fill'd with a Senſe of your Goodneſs? But why ſhould I intreat you in the Name of your Children? Is it poſſible I ſhould fear obtaining any thing of you, when I ask it in my own Name? And muſt I uſe any other Prayers than my own, to prevail upon you? The St. Auſtin's, Tertullian's, and Jerome's, have wrote to the Eudoxa's, Paula's, and Melania's; and can you read thoſe Names, though of Saints, and not remember mine?

mine? Can it be Criminal for you to imitate St. Jerome, and diſcourſe with me concerning the Scripture; or Tertullian, and preach Mortification; or St. Auſtin, and explain to me the Nature of Grace? Why ſhould I only reap no Advantage from your Learning? When you write to me, you will write to your Wife. Marriage has made ſuch a Correſpondence lawful; and ſince you can, without giving the leaſt Scandal, ſatisfie me, why will you not? I am not only engaged by my Vows, which might poſſibly be ſometimes neglected; but I have a barbarous Uncle, whoſe Inhumanity is a Security againſt any criminal Deſire, which Tenderneſs and the Remembrance of our paſt Enjoyments might inſpire. There is nothing that can cauſe you any Fear; you need not fly to Conquer. You may ſee me, hear my Sighs, and be a Witneſs of all my Sorrows, without incurring any Danger, ſince you can only relieve me with Tears and Words. If I have put myſelf into a Cloiſter with Reaſon, perſwade me to continue in it with Devotion: You have been the Occaſion of all my Misfortune: you therefore muſt be the Inſtrument of all my Comfort.

You cannot but remember, (for what do not Lovers remember?) with what Pleaſure I have paſt whole Days in hearing you diſcourſe. How when you were abſent I ſhut myſelf from every one to write to you; how uneaſy I was, 'till my Letter had come to your Hands; what artful Management it required to engage Confidents: This Detail perhaps ſurpriſes you, and you are in Pain for what will follow. But I am no longer aſhamed, that my Paſſion has had no Bounds for you; for I have done more than all this. I have hated myſelf that I might love you; I came hither to ruin myſelf in a perpetual Impriſonment, that I might make you live quiet and eaſie. Nothing but Virtue, join'd to a Love perfectly diſingaged from the Commerce of the Senſes, could have produced ſuch Effects. Vice never inſpires any Thing like this, it is too much enſlaved to the Body. When we love Pleaſures, we love the living and not the dead. We leave off burning with Deſire, for thoſe who can no longer burn for us. This was my cruel cruel Uncle's Notion; he meaſured my Virtue by the Frailty of my Sex, and thought it was the Man, and not the Perſon, I loved. But he has been guilty to no Purpoſe. I love you more than ever, and to revenge myſelf of him, I will ſtill love you with all the Tenderneſs of my Soul 'till the laſt Moment of my Life. If formerly my Affection for you was not ſo pure, if in thoſe Days the Mind and the Body ſhared in the Pleaſure of loving you, I often told you even then, that I was more pleaſed with poſſeſſing your Heart, than with any other Happineſs, and the Man was the thing I leaſt valu'd in you.

You cannot but be entirely perſuaded of this, by the extreme Unwillingneſs I ſhew'd to Marry you; tho' I knew that the Name of Wife was honourable in the World, and holy in Religion, yet the Name of your Miſtreſs had greater Charms, becauſe it was more free. The Bonds of Matrimony, however honourable, ſtill bear with them a neceſſary Engagement. And I was very unwilling to be neceſſitated to love always a Man who perhaps would not always love me. I deſpiſed the Name of Wife, that I might live happy with that of Miſtreſs; And I find by your Letter to your Friend, you have not forgot that Delicacy of Paſſion in a Woman who loved always you with the utmoſt Tenderneſs; and yet wiſh'd to love you more. You have very juſtly obſerved in your Letter, that I eſteemed thoſe Publick Engagements inſipid, which form Alliances only to be diſſolv'd by Death, and which put Life and Love under the ſame unhappy Neceſſity. But you have not added how often I have made Proteſtations that it was infinitely preferable to me to live with Abelard as his Miſtreſs, than with any other as Empreſs of the World, and that I was more happy in obeying you, than I ſhould have been in lawfully captivating the Lord of the Univerſe. Riches and Pomp are not the Charms of Love. True Tenderneſs makes us ſeparate the Lover from all that is external to him, and ſetting aſide his Quality, Fortune and Employments, conſider him ſingly by himſelf.

'Tis not Love, but the Deſire of Riches and Honour, which makes Women run into the Embraces of an Indolent Husband.

band. Ambition, not Affection, forms ſuch Marriages. I believe indeed they may be followed with ſome Honours and Advantages, but I can never think that this is the Way to enjoy the Pleaſures of an affectionate Union, nor to feel thoſe ſecret and charming Emotions of Hearts that have long ſtrove to be united. Theſe Martyrs of Marriage pine always for larger Fortunes, which they think they have loſt. The Wife ſees Husbands richer than her own, and the Husband Wives better Portioned than his. Their Intereſted Vows occaſion Regret, and Regret produces Hatred. They ſoon part, or always deſire it. This reſtleſs and tormenting Paſſion puniſhes them for aiming at other Advantages by Love than Love itſelf.

If there is any Thing which may properly be call'd Happineſs here below, I am perſwaded it is in the Union of two Perſons who love each other with perfect Liberty, who are united by a ſecret Inclination, and ſatisfied with each other's Merit: Their Hearts are full, and leave no Vacancy for any other Paſſion; they enjoy perpetual Tranquility, becauſe they enjoy Content.

Digitized by Google

IF I could believe you as truly perſwaded of my Merit as I am of yours, I might ſay there has been a Time when we were ſuch a Pair. Alas! How was it poſſible I ſhould not be certain of your Merit? If I could ever have doubted it, the univerſal Eſteem would have made me determine in your Favour. What Country, what City has not deſir'd your Preſence? Could you ever retire but you drew the Eyes and Hearts of all after you? Did not every one rejoice in having ſeen you? Even Women, breaking thro' the Laws of Decorum which Cuſtom had impoſed upon them, ſhewed manifeſtly they felt ſomething more for you than Eſteem. I have known ſome who have been profuſe in their Husbands Praiſes who have yet envied my Happineſs, and given ſtrong Intimations, they could have refuſed you nothing. But what could reſiſt you? Your Reputation, which ſo much ſooth'd the Vanity of our Sex; your Air, your Manner; that Life in your Eyes which ſo admirably expreſs'd the Vivacity of your Mind; your Converſation, with that Eaſe and Elegance, which gave every Thing you ſpoke ſuch an agreeable and

and inſinuating Turn; in ſhort, every Thing ſpoke for you: Very different from ſome mere Scholars, who with all their Learning, have not the Capacity to keep up an ordinary Converſation; and with all their Wit, cannot win the Affections of Women, who have a much leſs Share than themſelves.

WITH what Eaſe did you compoſe Verſes? And yet thoſe ingenious Trifles, which were but a Recreation after your more ſerious Studies, are ſtill the Entertainment and Delight of Perſons of the beſt Taſte. The ſmalleſt Song, nay the leaſt Sketch of any Thing you made for me, had a thouſand Beauties capable of making it laſt as long as there are Love or Lovers in the World. Thus thoſe Songs will be ſung in Honour of other Women, which you deſigned only for me; and thoſe tender and natural Expreſſions which ſpoke your Love, will help others to explain their Paſſion, with much more Advantage than what they themſelves are capable of.

WHAT Rivals did your Galantries of this kind occaſion me? How many Ladies laid Claim to them? 'Twas a Tribute their Self-love paid to their Beauty. How many have I ſeen with Sighs declare their Paſſion for you, when after ſome common Viſit you had made them, they chanced to be complimented for the Sylvia of your Poems: Others in Deſpair and Envy have reproach'd me, that I had no Charms but what your Wit beſtow'd on me, nor in any Thing the Advantage over them, but in being beloved by you. Can you believe me if I tell you, that notwithſtanding the Vanity of my Sex, I thought myſelf peculiarly happy in having a Lover, to whom I was obliged for my Charms: and took a ſecret Pleaſure in being admired by a Man, who when he pleaſed could raiſe his Miſtreſs to the Character of a Goddeſs? Pleaſed with your Glory only, I read with Delight all thoſe Praiſes you offer'd me, and without reflecting how little I deſerved, I believed myſelf ſuch as you deſcribed me, that I might be more certain I pleas'd you.

But oh! Where is that happy Time fled? I now lament my Lover, and of all my Joys there remains nothing but the painful Remembrance that they are paſt. Now learn, learn, all you my Rivals who once viewed my Happineſs with ſuch jealous Eyes, that he you once envied me, can never more be yours or mine. I loved him; my Love was his Crime, and the Cauſe of his Puniſhment. My Beauty once charmed him: Pleas'd with each other, we paſs'd our brighteſt Days in Tranquility and Happineſs. If that was a Crime, 'tis a Crime I am yet fond of, and I have no other Regret, than that againſt my Will I muſt neceſſarily be innocent. But what do I ſay? My Misfortune was to have cruel Relations, whoſe Malice diſturbed the Calm we enjoyed: Had they been capable of the Returns of Reaſon, I had now been happy in the Enjoyment of my dear Husband. Oh! How cruel were they when their blind Fury urged a Villain to ſurpriſe you in your Sleep! Where was I? Where was your Heloiſe then? What Joy ſhould I have had in defending my Lover? I would have guarded you from Violence, tho' at the Expence of my Life; my Cries and Shrieks alone would have ſtopp'd the Hand ——Oh! whither does the Exceſs of Paſſion hurry me? Here Love is ſhock'd, and Modeſty, join'd with Deſpair, deprive me of Words: 'Tis Eloquence to be ſilent, where no Expreſſions can reach the Greatneſs of the Misfortune.

But tell me whence proceeds your Neglect of me ſince my being Profeſs'd? You know nothing mov'd me to it but your Diſgrace, nor did I give any Conſent but yours. Let me hear what is the Occaſion of your Coldneſs, or give me Leave to tell you now my Opinion. Was it not the ſole View of Pleaſure which engaged you to me? And has not my Tenderneſs, by leaving you nothing to wiſh for, extinguiſh'd your Deſires? Wretched Heloiſe! You could pleaſe when you wiſh'd to avoid it: You merited Incenſe, when you cou'd remove to a Diſtance the Hand that offer'd it. But ſince your Heart has been ſoften'd, and has yielded; ſince you have Devoted and Sacrificed yourſelf, you are deſerted and forgotten. I am convinc'd, by a ſad Experience, that it is natural to avoid thoſe to whom we have been too much oblig'd; and that uncommon Generoſity produces Neglect rather than Acknowledgment. My Heart ſurrender'd too ſoon, ſoon, to gain the Eſteem of the Conqueror; you took it without Difficulty, and give it up as eaſily. But ungrateful as you are, I will never conſent to it. And tho' in this Place I ought not to retain a Wiſh of my own, yet I have ever ſecretly preſerved the Deſire of being beloved by you. When I pronounced my ſad Vow, I then had about me your laſt Letters, in which you proteſted you would be wholly mine, and would never live but to love me. 'Tis to you therefore I have offered myſelf; you had my Heart, and I had yours; do not demand any Thing back: You muſt bear with my Paſſion, as a thing which of Right belongs to you, and from which you can no Ways be diſingaged.

ALAS! What Folly is it to talk at this rate? I ſee nothing here but marks of the Deity, and I ſpeak of nothing but Man! You have been the cruel Occaſion of this, by your Conduct: Unfaithful Man! Ought you at once to break off loving me? Why did you not deceive me for a while, rather than immediately abandon me? If you had given me at leaſt but ſome faint Signs even of a dying Paſſion, I myſelf had favour'd the Deception. But in vain would I flatter myſelf that you could be conſtant; you have left me no Colour of making your Excuſe. I am earneſtly deſirous to ſee you, but if that be impoſſible, I will content myſelf with a few Lines from your Hand. Is it ſo hard for one who loves, to write? I ask for none of your Letters filled with Learning, and writ for your Reputation: All I deſire is ſuch Letters as the Heart dictates, and which the Hand can ſcarce Write faſt enough. How did I deceive myſelf with the Hopes that you would be wholly mine, when I took the Veil, and engaged myſelf to live for ever under your Laws? For in being Profeſſed, I vow'd no more than to be yours only, and I obliged myſelf voluntarily to a Confinement in which you deſired to place me. Death only then can make me leave the Place where you have fixed me: and then too my Aſhes ſhall reſt here, and wait for yours, in order to ſhew my Obedience and Devotedneſs to you, to the lateſt Moment poſſible.

WHY ſhould I conceal from you the Secret of my Call? you know it was neither Zeal nor Devotion which led me to the the Cloiſter. Your Conſcience is too faithful a Witneſs to permit you to diſown it. Yet here I am, and here I will remain; to this Place an unfortunate Love and my cruel Relations have Condemned me. But if you do not continue your Concern for me, if I loſe your Affection, what have I gain'd by my Impriſonment? What Recompence can I hope for? The unhappy Conſequences of a criminal Conduct, and your Diſgraces, have put on me this Habit of Chaſtity, and not the ſincere Deſire of being truly penitent. Thus I ſtrive and labour in vain. Among thoſe who are wedded to God I ſerve a Man: Among the Heroick Supporters of the Croſs I am a poor Slave to a Human Paſſion; at the Head of a Religious Community I am devoted to Abelard only. What a Prodigy am I? Enlighten me, O Lord! Does thy Grace or my own Deſpair draw theſe Words from me? I am ſenſible I am, in the Temple of Chaſtity, covered only with the Aſhes of that Fire which hath conſumed us. I am here, I confeſs, a Sinner, but one who far from weeping for her Sins, weeps only for her Lover; far from abhorring horring her Crimes, endeavours only to add to them; and who with a Weakneſs unbecoming the State I am in, pleaſe my ſelf continually with the Remembrance of paſt Actions, when it is impoſſible to renew them.

Good God! what is all this! I reproach myſelf for my own Faults, I accuſe you for yours, and to what Purpoſe? Veil'd as I am, behold in what a Diſorder you have plunged me! How difficult is it to fight always for Duty againſt Inclination? I know what Obligations this Veil lays on me, but I feel more ſtrongly what Power a long habitual Paſſion has over my Heart. I am conquered by my Inclination. My Love troubles my Mind, and diſorders my Will. Sometimes I am ſway'd by the Sentiments of Piety which ariſe in me, and the next Moment I yield up my Imagination to all that is Amorous and Tender. I tell you To-day what I would not have ſaid to you Yeſterday. I had reſolved to Love you no more; I conſider'd I had made a Vow, taken the Veil, and am as it were dead and buried; yet there riſes unexpectedly from the Bottom of my Heart a Paſſion ſion which triumphs over all theſe Notions, and darkens all my Reaſon and Devotion. You reign in ſuch inward Retreats of my Soul, that I know not where to attack you: When I endeavour to break thoſe Chains by which I am bound to you, I only deceive myſelf, and all the Efforts I am able to make ſerve but to bind them the faſter. Oh, for Pity's ſake, help a Wretch to renounce her Deſires, herſelf, and if it be poſſible even to renounce You! If you are a Lover, a Father, help a Miſtreſs, comfort a Child! Theſe tender Names, cannot they move you? Yield either to Pity or Love. If you gratify my Requeſt I ſhall continue a Religious without longer profaning my Calling. I am ready to humble myſelf with you to the wonderful Providence of God, who does all Things for our Sanctification, who by his Grace purifies all that is vicious and corrupt in the Principle, and by the inconceivable Riches of his Mercy draws us to himſelf againſt our Wiſhes, and by degrees opens our Eyes to diſcern the Greatneſs of his Bounty, which at firſt we would not underſtand.

I thought to end my Letter here. But now I am complaining againſt you, I muſt unload my Heart, and tell you all its Jealouſies and Reproaches. Indeed I thought it ſomething hard that when we had both engaged to conſecrate our ſelves to Heaven, you ſhould inſiſt upon my doing it firſt. Does Abelard then, ſaid I, ſuſpect he ſhall ſee renew'd in me the Example of Lot's Wife, who could not forbear looking back when ſhe left Sodom? If my Youth and Sex might give Occaſion of Fear, that I ſhould return to the World; could not my Behaviour, my Fidelity, and this Heart which you ought to know, could not theſe baniſh ſuch ungenerous Apprehenſions? This diſtruſtful Foreſight touch'd me ſenſibly. I ſaid to myſelf, There was a Time when he could rely upon my bare Word, and does he now want Vows to ſecure himſelf of me? What Occaſion have I given him in the whole Courſe of my Life to admit the leaſt Suſpicion? I could meet him at all his Aſſignations, and would I decline following him to the Seats of Holineſs? I who have not refuſed to be a Victim of Pleaſure to gratify tify him, can he think I would refuſe to be a Sacrifice of Honour to obey him? Has Vice ſuch Charms to well-born Souls? and when we have once drank of the Cup of Sinners, is it with ſuch Difficulty that we take the Calice of Saints? Or did you believe yourſelf a greater Maſter to teach Vice than Virtue, or did you think it was more eaſy to perſuade me to the firſt than the latter? No: This Suſpicion would be injurious to both. Virtue is too amiable not to be embraced, when you reveal her Charms; and Vice too hideous not to be avoided, when you ſhew her Deformities. Nay, when you pleaſe, any Thing ſeems lovely to me, and nothing is frightful or difficult when you are by. I am only Weak when I am alone and unſupported by you, and therefore it depends on you alone, that I may be ſuch as you deſire. I wiſh to Heaven you had not ſuch a Power over me. If you had any Occaſion to fear, you would be leſs negligent. But what is there for you to fear? I have done too much, and now have nothing more to do, but to triumph over your Ingratitude. When we lived happy together, you might have have made it a Doubt whether Pleaſure or Affection united me more to you; but the Place from whence I write to you, muſt now have entirely taken away that Doubt. Even here I love you as much as ever I did in the World. If I had loved Pleaſures, could I not yet have found means to have gratified myſelf? I was not above Twenty-two Years old: And there were other Men left, tho' I was deprived of Abelard: And yet did I not bury myſelf alive in a Nunnery, and triumph over Love, at an Age capable of enjoying it in its full Latitude? 'Tis to you I Sacrifice theſe Remains of a tranſitory Beauty, theſe widow'd Nights and tedious Days, which I paſs without ſeeing you; and ſince you cannot poſſeſs them, I take them from you to offer them to Heaven, and to make, alas! but a ſecondary Oblation of my Heart, my Days, and my Life!

I am ſenſible I have dwelt too long on this Head; I ought to ſpeak leſs to you of your Misfortunes, and of my own Sufferings, for Love of you. We tarniſh the Luſtre of our moſt beautiful Actions, when we applaud them our ſelves. This is true, true, and yet there is a Time when we may with Decency commend our ſelves; when we have to do with thoſe whom baſe Ingratitude has ſtupified, we cannot too much praiſe our own good Actions. Now if you were of this ſort of Men, this would be a Home Reflection on you. Irreſolute as I am I ſtill love you, and yet I muſt hope for nothing. I have renounced Life, and ſtripp'd myſelf of every thing, but I find I neither have nor can renounce my Abelard: Tho' I have loſt my Lover, I ſtill preſerve my Love. O Vows! O Convent! I have not loſt my Humanity under your inexorable Diſcipline! You have not made me Marble by changing my Habit: My Heart is not hardened by my Impriſonment; I am ſtill ſenſible to what has touched me, tho' alas I ought not to be ſo! Without offending your Commands, permit a Lover to exhort me to live in Obedience to your rigorous Rules. Your Yoke will be lighter, if that Hand ſupport me under it; your Exerciſes will be amiable, if he ſhews me their Advantage. Retirement, Solitude! You will not appear terrible, if I may but ſtill know I have any any Place in his Memory. A Heart which has been ſo ſenſibly affected as mine cannot ſoon be indifferent. We fluctuate long between Love and Hatred, before we can arrive at a happy Tranquility, and we always flatter our ſelves with ſome diſtant Hope, that we ſhall not be quite forgotten.

YES, Abelard, I conjure you by the Chains I bear here, to eaſe the Weight of them, and make them as agreeable as I wiſh they were to me: Teach me the Maxims of Divine Love. Since you have forſaken me I glory in being wedded to Heaven. My Heart adores that Title, and diſdains any other; tell me how this Divine Love is nouriſhed, how it operates, and purifies itſelf. When we were toſs'd in the Ocean of the World we could hear of nothing but your Verſes, which publiſhed every where our Joys and our Pleaſures. Now we are in the Haven of Grace, is it not fit you ſhould diſcourſe to me of this Happineſs, and teach me every thing which might improve and heighten it? Shew me the ſame Complaiſance in my preſent Condition, as you did when we were in the World. Without changing the Ardor of our

our Affections, let us change their Object; let us leave our Songs, and ſing Hymns; let us lift up our Hearts to God, and have no Tranſports but for his Glory.

I expect this from you as a thing you cannot refuſe me. God has a peculiar Right over the Hearts of Great Men, which he has created. When he pleaſes to touch them, he raviſhes them, and lets them not ſpeak nor breathe but for his Glory: Till that Moment of Grace arrives, O think of me———do not forget me—remember my Love, my Fidelity, my Conſtancy; love me as your Miſtreſs, cheriſh me as your Child, your Siſter, your Wife. Conſider that I ſtill love you, and yet ſtrive to avoid loving you. What a Word, what a Deſign is this! I ſhake with Horror, and my Heart revolts againſt what I ſay. I ſhall blot all my Paper with Tears—I end my long Letter, wiſhing you, if you can deſire it, (would to Heaven I could) for ever Adieu.

LETTER III.

ABELARD to HELOISE.

That the Reader may make a right Judgment on the following Letter, it is proper he ſhould be informed of the Condition Abelard was in when he wrote it. The Duke of Britany, whoſe Subject he was Born, jealous of the Glory of France, which then ingroſſed all the moſt famous Scholars of Europe, and being beſides acquainted with the Perſecution Abelard had ſuffer'd from his Enemies, had nominated him to the Abby of St. Gildas, and by this Benefaction and Mark of his Eſteem, engaged him to paſs the reſt of his Days in his Dominions. He received this Favour with great Joy, imagining, that by leaving France, he ſhould loſe his Paſſion, and gain a new turn of Mind upon entring into his new Dignity. The Abby of St. Gildas is ſeated upon a Rock, which the Sea beats with its Waves. Abelard, who had laid on himſelf the Neceſſity of vanquiſhing a Paſſion which Abſence had in a great meaſure weakened, endeavoured in this Solitude to extinguiſh the Remains of it by his Tears. But upon his receiving the foregoing Letter, he could not reſiſt ſo powerful an Attack, but proves as weak and as much to be pity'd as Heloiſe: 'Tis not then a Maſter or Director that ſpeaks to her, but a Man who had loved her, and loves her ſtill: And under this Character we are to conſider Abelard when he wrote the following Letter.

If he ſeems by ſome Paſſages in it to have begun to feel the Motions of Divine Grace, they appear as yet to be only by Starts, and without any Uniformity.

COULD I have imagined that a Letter not written to yourſelf could have fallen into your Hands, I had been more cautious not to have inſerted any thing in it which might awaken the Memory of our paſt Misfortunes. I deſcribed with Boldneſs the Series of my Diſgraces to a Friend, in order to make him leſs ſenſible of the Loſs he had ſuſtain'd. If by this well-meaning Artifice I have diſtrubed you, I purpoſe here to dry up thoſe Tears which the ſad Deſcription occaſioned you to ſhed: I intend to mix my Grief with yours, and pour out my Heart before you; in ſhort, to lay open before your Eyes all my Trouble, and the Secret of my Soul, which my Vanity has hitherto made me conceal from the reſt of the World, and which you now force from me, in ſpight of my Reſolutions to the contrary.

IT is true, that in a Senſe of the Afflictions which had befallen us, and obſerving

ing that no change of our Condition was to be expected; that thoſe proſperous Days which had ſeduced us were now paſt, and there remain'd nothing but to eraze out of our Minds, by painful Endeavours, all Marks and Remembrance of them, I had wiſhed to find in Philoſophy and Religion a Remedy for my Diſgrace; I ſearch'd out an Aſylum to ſecure me from Love. I was come to the ſad Experiment of making Vows to harden my Heart. But what have I gain'd by this? If my Paſſion has been put under a Reſtraint, my Idæa's yet remain. I promiſe myſelf that I will forget you, and yet cannot think of it without loving you; and am pleaſed with that Thought. My Love is not at all weaken'd by thoſe Reflections I make in order to free myſelf. The Silence I am ſurrounded with makes me more ſenſible to its Impreſſions, and while I am unemploy'd with any other things, this makes itſelf the Buſineſs of my whole Vacation. 'Till after a Multitude of uſeleſs Endeavours I begin to perſwade myſelf, that 'tis a ſuperfluous Trouble to ſtrive to free myſelf; and that it is Wiſdom ſufficient if I can conceal conceal from every one but you, my Confuſion and Weakneſs.

I remove to a diſtance from your Perſon, with an Intention of avoiding you as an Enemy; and yet I inceſſantly ſeek for you in my Mind: I recall your Image in my Memory; and in ſuch different Diſquietudes I betray and contradict myſelf. I hate you; I love you; Shame preſſes me on all ſides; I am at this Moment afraid leaſt I ſhould ſeem more indifferent than you are, and yet I am aſhamed to diſcover my Trouble. How weak are we in ourſelves, if we do not ſupport ourſelves on the Croſs of Chriſt? Shall we have ſo little Courage, and ſhall that Uncertainty your Heart labours with, of ſerving two Maſters, affect mine too? You ſee the Confuſion I am in, what I blame myſelf for, and what I ſuffer. Religion Commands me to purſue Virtue, ſince I have nothing to hope for from Love. But Love ſtill preſerves its Dominion in my Fancy, and entertains its ſelf with paſt Pleaſures. Memory ſupplies the Place of a Miſtreſs. Piety and Duty are not always the Fruits of Retirement; even in Deſarts, when the Dew of Heaven falls not on us, we love what we ought no longer to love. The Paſſions, ſtir'd up by Solitude, fill thoſe Regions of Death and Silence; and it is very ſeldom that what ought to be is truly follow'd there, and that God only is Loved and Served. Had I always had ſuch Notions as theſe, I had inſtructed you better. You call me your Maſter; 'tis true, you were intruſted to my Care. I ſaw you, I was earneſt to teach you vain Sciences; it coſt you your Innocence, and me my Liberty. Your Uncle, who was fond of you, became therefore my Enemy, and revenged himſelf on me. If now having loſt the Power of ſatisfying my Paſſion, I had loſt too that of loving you, I ſhould have ſome Conſolation. My Enemies would have given me that Tranquility, which Origen purchaſed by a Crime: How miſerable am I! My Misfortune does not looſe my Chains, my Paſſion grows furious by Impotence, and that Deſire I ſtill have for you amidſt all my Diſgraces, makes me more unhappy than the Misfortune itſelf. I find myſelf much more guilty in my Thoughts of

of you, even amidſt my Tears, than in poſſeſſing yourſelf when I was in full Liberty. I continually think of you, I continually call to Mind that Day when you beſtowed on me the firſt Marks of your Tenderneſs. In this Condition, O Lord! if I run to proſtrate myſelf before thy Altars, if I beſeech thee to pity me, why does not the pure Flame of thy Spirit conſume the Sacrifice that is offered to thee? Cannot this Habit of Penitence which I wear, intereſt Heaven to treat me more favourably? But that is ſtill inexorable, becauſe my Paſſion ſtill lives in me, the Fire is only covered over with deceitful Aſhes, and cannot be extinguiſhed but by extraordinary Grace. We deceive Men, but nothing is hid from God.

You tell me, that 'tis for me you live under that Veil which covers you; why do you prophane your Vocation with ſuch Words? Why provoke a Jealous God by a Blaſphemy? I hoped, after our Separation, you would have chang'd your Sentiments; I hoped too, that God would have deliver'd me from the Tumult of my Senſes, and that Contrariety which reigns in my Heart. We commonly die to the Affections of thoſe whom we ſee no more, and they to ours: Abſence is the Tomb of Love. But to me Abſence is an unquiet Remembrance of what I once loved, which continually torments me. I flatter'd myſelf that when I ſhould ſee you no more, you would only reſt in my Memory, without giving any Trouble to my Mind; that Britany and the Sea would inſpire other Thoughts; that my Faſts and Studies would by degrees eraze you out of my Heart: But in ſpite of ſevere Faſts and redoubled Studies, in ſpite of the diſtance of three hundred Miles which ſeparates us; your Image, ſuch as you deſcribe yourſelf in your Veil, appears to me, and confounds all my Reſolutions.

WHAT Means have I not uſed? I have armed my own Hands againſt myſelf; I have exhauſted my Strength in conſtant Exerciſes; I Comment upon St. Paul; I Diſpute with Ariſtotle; in ſhort, I do all I uſed to do before I lov'd you, but all in vain; nothing can be ſucceſsful that oppoſes you. Oh! do not add to my Miſeries by your Conſtancy; forget, if you can, your Favours, and that Right which they claim over me; permit me to be indifferent. I envy their Happineſs who have never loved; how quiet and eaſie are they! But the Tide of Pleaſures has always a reflux of Bitterneſs; I am but too much convinc'd now of this; but tho' I am no longer deceiv'd by Love, I am not cured: While my Reaſon condemns it, my Heart declares for it. I am deplorable, that I have not the Ability to free myſelf from a Paſſion which ſo many Circumſtances, this Place, my Perſon, and my Diſgraces, tend to deſtroy. I yield, without conſidering, that a Reſiſtance would wipe out my paſt Offences, and would procure me in their ſtead, Merit and Repoſe. Why ſhould you uſe Eloquence to reproach me for my Flight, and for my Silence? Spare the Recital of our Aſſignations, and your conſtant Exactneſs to them; without calling up ſuch diſturbing Thoughts, I have enough to ſuffer. What great Advantages would Philoſophy give us over other Men, if by ſtudying it we could learn to govern our Paſſions? But how humbled ought we to be when we cannot Maſter them? What Efforts, what Relapſes, what Agitations do we undergo? And how long are we toſt in this Confuſion, unable to exert our Reaſon, to poſſeſs our Souls, or to rule our Affections?

WHAT a troubleſome Employment is Love! and how valuable is Virtue even upon Conſideration of our own Eaſe! Recollect your Extravagancies of Paſſion, gueſs at my Diſtractions; number up our Cares, if poſſible, our Griefs, and our Inquietudes; throw theſe Things out of the Account, and let Love have all its remaining Softneſs and Pleaſure. How little is that? And yet for ſuch Shadows of Enjoyments which at firſt appeared to us, are we ſo weak our whole Lives that we cannot now help Writing to each other, covered as we are with Sackcloth and Aſhes: How much happier ſhould we be, if by our Humiliation and Tears we could make our Repentance ſure. The Love of Pleaſure is not eradicated out of the Soul, but by extraordinary Efforts; it it has ſo powerful a Party in our Breaſts, that we find it difficult to condemn it ourſelves. What Abhorrence can I be ſaid to have of my Sins, if the Objects of them are always amiable to me? How can I ſeparate from the Perſon I love, the Paſſion I muſt deteſt? Will the Tears I ſhed be ſufficient to render it odious to me? I know not how it happens, there is always a Pleaſure in weeping for a beloved Object. 'Tis difficult in our Sorrow to diſtinguiſh Penitence from Love. The Memory of the Crime, and the Memory of the Object which has charmed us, are too nearly related to be immediately ſeparated. And the Love of God in its beginning, does not wholly annihilate the Love of the Creature.

But what Excuſes cou'd I not find in you, if the Crime were excuſable? Unprofitable Honour, troubleſome Riches, could never tempt me; but thoſe Charms, that Beauty, that Air, which I yet behold at this Inſtant, have occaſioned my Fall. Your Looks were the beginning of my Guilt; your Eyes, your Diſcourſe, pierc'd my Heart; and in ſpite of that

Ambition and Glory which fill'd it, and offer'd to make a Defence, Love soon made itself Master. God, in order to punish me, forsook me. His Providence permitted those Consequences which have since happened. You are no longer of the World; you have renounced it: I am a Religious, devoted to Solitude; shall we make no Advantage of our Condition? Would you destroy my Piety in its Infant State? Would you have me forsake the Convent into which I am but newly enter'd? Must I renounce my Vows? I have made them in the Presence of God; Whither shall I fly from his Wrath, if I violate them? Suffer me to seek for Ease in my Duty: How difficult is it to procure that! I pass whole Days and Nights alone in this Cloister, without closing my Eyes. My Love burns fiercer, amidst the happy Indifference of those who surround me, and my Heart is at once pierced with your Sorrows and its own. Oh what a Loss have I sustain'd, when I consider your Constancy! What Pleasures have I miss'd enjoying! I ought not to confess this Weak-

Weakneſs to you; I am ſenſible I commit a Fault; if I could have ſhew'd more firmneſs of Mind, I ſhould perhaps have provoked your Reſentment againſt me, and your Anger might work that Effect in you which your Virtue cou'd not. If in the World I publiſhed my Weakneſs by Verſes and Love-ſongs, ought not the dark Cells of this Houſe to conceal that Weakneſs, at leaſt under an Appearance of Piety! Alas! I am ſtill the ſame! Or if I avoid the Evil, I cannot do the Good; and yet I ought to join both, in order to make this manner of living profitable. But how difficult is this in the Trouble which ſurrounds me? Duty, Reaſon, and Decency, which upon other Occaſions have ſome Power over me, are here entirely uſeleſs. The Goſpel is a Language I do not underſtand, when it oppoſes my Paſſion. Thoſe Oaths which I have taken before the Holy Altar, are feeble Helps when oppoſed to you. Amidſt ſo many Voices which call me to my Duty, I hear and I obey nothing but the ſecret Dictates of a deſperate Paſſion. Void of all Reliſh for Virtue, any Concern for my Condition, or any Application to my Studies, I am continually preſent by my Imagination where I ought not to be, and I find I have no Power, when I would at any time correct it. I feel a perpetual Strife between my Inclination and my Duty. I find myſelf entirely a diſtracted Lover; unquiet in the midſt of Silence, and reſtleſs in this abode of Peace and Repoſe. How ſhameful is ſuch a Condition!

CONSIDER me no more, I entreat you, as a Founder, or any great Perſonage; your Encomiums do but ill agree with ſuch multiply'd Weakneſſes. I am a miſerable Sinner, proſtrate before my Judge, and with my Face preſſed to the Earth, I mix my Tears and Sighs in the Duſt, when the Beams of Grace and Reaſon enlighten me. Come, ſee me in this Poſture, and ſolicite me to love you? Come, if you think fit, and in your Holy Habit thruſt yourſelf between God and me, and be a Wall of Separation. Come, and force from me thoſe Sighs, Thoughts, and Vows, which I owe to him only. Aſſiſt the Evil Spirits, and be the the Instrument of their Malice. What cannot you induce a Heart to, whose Weakness you so perfectly know? But rather withdraw yourself, and contribute to my Salvation. Suffer me to avoid Destruction, I entreat you, by our former tenderest Affection, and by our now common Misfortunes. It will always be the highest Love to shew none: I here release you of all your Oaths, and Engagements. Be God's wholly, to whom you are appropriated; I will never oppose so pious a Design. How happy shall I be if I thus lose you! then shall I be indeed a Religious, and you a perfect Example of an Abbess.

MAKE yourself amends by so glorious a Choice; make your Virtue a Spectacle worthy Men and Angels: Be humble among your Children, assiduous in your Choire, exact in your Discipline, diligent in your Reading; make even your Recreations useful. Have you purchased your Vocation at so slight a rate, as that you should not turn it to the best Advantage? Since you have permitted yourself to be abused by false Doctrine, and and Criminal Inſtructions, reſiſt not thoſe good Counſels which Grace and Religion inſpire me with. I will confeſs to you, I have thought myſelf hitherto an abler Maſter to inſtill Vice, than to excite Virtue. My falſe Eloquence has only ſet off falſe Good. My Heart, drunk with Voluptuouſneſs, could only ſuggeſt Terms proper and moving to recommend that. The Cup of Sinners overflows with ſo enchanting a Sweetneſs, and we are naturally ſo much inclined to taſte it, that it needs only be offer'd to us. On the other Hand, the Calice of Saints is filled with a bitter Draught, and Nature ſtarts from it. And yet you reproach me with Cowardice for giving it you firſt; I willingly ſubmit to theſe Accuſations. I cannot enough admire the Readineſs you ſhewed to take the Religious Habit: Bear therefore with Courage the Croſs which you have taken up ſo reſolutely. Drink of the Calice of Saints, even to the bottom, without turning your Eyes with uncertainty upon me: Let me remove far from you, and obey the Apoſtle who hath ſaid fly.

You

You intreat me to return, under a Pretence of Devotion. Your Earneſtneſs in this Point creates a Suſpicion in me, and makes me doubtful how to anſwer you. Should I commit an Error here, my Words would bluſh, if I may ſay ſo, after the Hiſtory of my Misfortunes. The Church is jealous of its Glory, and commands that her Children ſhould be induced to the Practice of Virtue by virtuous means. When we have approach'd God after an unblameable manner, we may then with Boldneſs invite others to him. But to forget Heloiſe, to ſee her no more, is what Heaven demands of Abelard; and to expect nothing from Abelard, to loſe him, even in Idea, is what Heaven enjoins Heloiſe. To forget, in the Caſe of Love, is the moſt neceſſary Penitence, and the moſt difficult. It is eaſie to recount our Faults; how many, thro' Indiſcretion, have made themſelves a ſecond Pleaſure of this, inſtead of confeſſing them with Humility. The only way to return to God is, by neglecting the Creature which we have adored, and adoring God whom we have neglected. This

This may appear harsh, but it must be done if we would be saved.

To make it more easie, observe why I prest you to your Vow before I took mine; and pardon my Sincerity, and the design I have of meriting your Neglect and Hatred, if I conceal nothing from you of the Particulars you enquire after. When I saw myself so oppres'd with my Misfortune, my Impotency made me jealous, and I consider'd all Men as my Rivals. Love has more of Distrust than Assurance. I was apprehensive of abundance of things, because I saw I had abundance of Defects; and being tormented with fear from my own Example, I imagined your Heart, which had been so much accustomed to Love, would not be long without entering into a new Engagement. Jealousie can easily believe the most dreadful Consequences. I was desirous to put myself out of a Possibility of doubting of you. I was very urgent to perswade you that Decency required you should withdraw from the envious Eyes of the World; that Modesty, and our Friendship, demanded it; nay, that your your own Safety obliged you to it; and that after such a Revenge taken upon me, you could expect to be secure no where but in a Convent.

I will do you Justice, you were very easily perswaded to it. My Jealousie secretly triumph'd over your innocent Compliance; and yet, triumphant as I was, I yielded you up to God with an unwilling Heart. I still kept my Gift as much as was possible, and only parted with it that I might effectually put it out of the Power of Men. I did not perswade you to Religion out of any Regard to your Happiness, but condemn'd you to it, like an Enemy who destroys what he cannot carry off. And yet you heard my Discourses with Kindness, you sometimes interruped me with Tears, and pressed me to acquaint you which of the Convents was most in my Esteem. What a Comfort did I feel in seeing you shut up! I was now at Ease, and took a Satisfaction in considering that you did not continue long in the World after my Disgrace, and that you would return into it no more.

BUT ſtill this was doubtful; I imagined Women were incapable of maintaining any conſtant Reſolutions, unleſs they were forced by the neceſſity of fixed Vows. I wanted thoſe Vows, and Heaven itſelf for your Security, that I might no longer diſtruſt you. Ye holy Manſions, ye impenetrable Retreats, from what numberleſs Apprehenſions have you freed me? Religion and Piety keep a ſtrict Guard round your Grates and high Walls. What a Haven of Reſt is this to a jealous Mind! And with what Impatience did I endeavour after it! I went every Day trembling to exhort you to this Sacrifice; I admired, without daring to mention it then, a brightneſs in your Beauty which I had never obſerved before. Whether it was the Bloom of a riſing Virtue, or an Anticipation of that great loſs I was going to ſuffer, I was not curious in examining the Cauſe, but only haſtned your being Profeſſed. I engaged your Prioreſs in my Guilt by a criminal Bribe, with which I purchaſed the Right of burying you. The Profeſſed of the Houſe were alike bribed, and con-concealed from you, by my Directions, all their Scruples and Diſguſts. I omitted nothing, either little or great: And if you had eſcaped all my Snares, I myſelf would not have retired: I was reſolved to follow you every where. This Shadow of myſelf would always have purſu'd your Steps, and continually occaſioned either your Confuſion or Fear, which would have been a ſenſible Gratification to me.

But thanks to Heaven, you reſolved to make a Vow; I accompanied you with Terror to the foot of the Altar: And while you ſtretched out your Hand to touch the ſacred Cloth, I heard you pronounce diſtinctly thoſe fatal words which for ever ſeparated you from all Men. 'Till then your Beauty and Youth ſeemed to oppoſe my Deſign, and to threaten your return into the World. Might not a ſmall Temptation have chang'd you? Is it poſſible to renounce ones ſelf entirely at the Age of Two and Twenty? At an Age which claims the moſt abſolute Liberty, could you think the World no longer worthy of your regard?

gard? How much did I wrong you, and what Weakneſs did I impute to you? You were in my Imagination nothing but Lightneſs and Inconſtancy. Might not a young Woman at the noiſe of the Flames, and of the fall of Sodom, look back, and pity ſome one Perſon? I took notice of your Eyes, your Motion, your Air; I trembled at every thing. You may call ſuch a ſelf-intereſted Conduct Treachery, Perfidiouſneſs, Murther. A Love which was ſo like to Hatred, ought to provoke the utmoſt Contempt and Anger.

IT is fit you ſhould know that the very Moment, when I was convinced of your being entirely devoted to me, when I ſaw you were infinitely worthy of all my Love and Acknowledgment; I imagin'd I could love you no more; I thought it time to leave off giving you any Marks of Affection; and I conſider'd that by your Holy Eſpouſals you were now the peculiar Care of Heaven, even in the Quality of a Wife. My Jealouſie ſeemed to be extinguiſh'd: When God only is our Rival, we have nothing to fear; and being being in greater Tranquility than ever before, I dared even to offer up Prayers, and beſeech him to take you away from my Eyes; but it was not a time to make raſh Prayers; and my Faith was too imperfect to let them be heard. He who ſees the Depths and Secrets of all Mens Hearts, ſaw mine did not agree with my Words. Neceſſity and Deſpair were the Springs of this Proceeding. Thus I inadvertently offer'd an Inſult to Heaven, rather than a Sacrifice. God rejected my Offering and my Prayer, and continued my Puniſhment, by ſuffering me to continue my Love. Thus under the Guilt of your Vows, and of the Paſſion which preceded them, I muſt be tormented all the Days of my Life.

If God ſpoke to your Heart, as to that of a Religious whoſe Innocence had firſt engag'd him to heap on it a thouſand Favours, I ſhould have matter of Comfort; but to ſee both of us Victims of a criminal Love; to ſee this Love inſult us, and inveſt itſelf with our very Habits, as with Spoils it has taken from our Devotion, fills me with Horror and Trembling.

bling. Is this a State of Reprobation? Or are theſe the Conſequences of a long Drunkenneſs in Prophane Love? We cannot ſay Love is a Drunkenneſs and a Poiſon, 'till we are illuminated by Grace; in the mean time it is an Evil which we doat on. When we are under ſuch a Miſtake, the knowledge of our Miſery is the firſt Step towards Amendment. Who does not know that 'tis for the Glory of God, to find no other Foundation in Man for his Mercy, than Man's very Weakneſs? When he has ſhew'd us this Weakneſs, and we bewail it, he is ready to put forth his Omnipotence to aſſiſt us. Let us ſay for our Comfort, that what we ſuffer is one of thoſe long and terrible Temptations which have ſometimes diſturbed the Vocations of the moſt Holy.

God can afford his Preſence to Men, in order to ſoften their Calamities, whenever he ſhall think fit. It was his Pleaſure, when you took the Veil, to draw you to him by his Grace. I ſaw your Eyes, when you ſpoke your laſt farewel, fix'd upon the Croſs. It was above ſix Months before you wrote me a Letter, nor nor during all that time did I receive any Meſſage from you. I admired this Silence, which I durſt not blame, and could not imitate: I wrote to you, you returned me no Anſwer: Your Heart was then ſhut; but this Garden of the Spouſe is now open'd, he is withdrawn from it, and has left you alone: By removing from you, he has made Tryal of you; call him back, and ſtrive to regain him. We muſt have the Aſſiſtance of God, that we may break our Chains; we have engaged too deeply in Love, to free our ſelves. Our Follies have penetrated even into the moſt Sacred Places. Our Amours have been matter of Scandal to a whole Kingdom. They are read and admired; Love which produced them, has cauſed them to be deſcribed. We ſhall be a Conſolation for the Failings of Youth hereafter. Thoſe who offend after us, will think themſelves leſs Guilty. We are Criminals whoſe Repentance is late, O may it be ſincere! Let us repair, as far as is poſſible, the Evils we have done; and let France, which has been the Witneſs of our Crimes, be aſtoniſhed at our Peni-

Penitence. Let us confound all who would imitate our Guilt; let us take the Part of God againſt ourſelves, and by ſo doing prevent his Judgment. Our former Irregularities require Tears, Shame, and Sorrow to expiate them. Let us offer up theſe Sacrifices from our Hearts; let us bluſh, let us weep. If in theſe weak beginnings, Lord, our Heart is not entirely thine, let it at leaſt be made ſenſible that it ought to be ſo!

DELIVER yourſelf, Heloiſe, from the ſhameful Remains of a Paſſion which has taken too deep Root. Remember that the leaſt Thought for any other than God is an Adultery. If you could ſee me here with my meager Face, and melancholy Air, ſurrounded with numbers of perſecuting Monks, who are alarmed at my Reputation for Learning, and offended at my lean Viſage, as if I threaten'd them with a Reformation; what would you ſay of my baſe Sighs, and of thoſe unprofitable Tears which deceive theſe credulous Men. Alas! I am humbled under Love, and not under the Croſs. Pity me, and free yourſelf. If your Vocation cation be, as you ſay, my Work, deprive me not of the Merit of it by your continual Inquietudes. Tell me that you will honour the Habit which covers you, by an inward Retirement. Fear God, that you may be delivered from your Frailties. Love him, if you would advance in Virtue. Be not uneaſie in the Cloiſter, for it is the dwelling of Saints. Embrace your Bands, they are the Chains of Chriſt Jeſus: He will lighten them, and bear them with you, if you bear them with Humility.

WITHOUT growing ſevere to a Paſſion which yet poſſeſſes you, learn from your own Miſery to ſuccour your weak Siſters; pity them upon conſideration of your own Faults. And if any Thoughts too natural ſhould importune you, fly to the Foot of the Croſs, and beg for Mercy; there are Wounds open; lament before the dying Deity. At the Head of a religious Society be not a Slave, and having Rule over Queens, begin to govern yourſelf. Bluſh at the leaſt Revolt of your Senſes. Remember that even at the foot of the Altar we often Sacrifice to lying Spirits, and that no Incence can be more agreeable to them, than that which in thoſe Holy Places burns in the Heart of a Religious ſtill ſenſible of Paſſion and Love. If during your Abode in the World, your Soul has acquir'd a Habit of loving, feel it now no more but for Jeſus Chriſt. Repent of all the Moments of your Life which you have waſted upon the World, and upon Pleaſure; demand them of me, 'tis a Robbery which I am guilty of; take Courage, and boldly reproach me with it.

I have been indeed your Maſter, but it was only to teach you Sin. You call me your Father; before I had any Claim to this Title, I deſerved that of Parricide. I am your Brother, but 'tis the Affinity of our Crimes that has purchaſed me that diſtinction. I am call'd your Husband, but it is after a publick Scandal. If you have abuſed the Sanctity of ſo many venerable Names in the Superſcription of your Letter, to do me Honour, and flatter your own Paſſion, blot them out, and place in their ſtead thoſe of a Murtherer, a Villain, an Enemy, who has conconſpired againſt your Honour, troubled your Quiet, and betray'd your Innocence. You would have periſh'd thro' my Means, but for an extraordinary act of Grace, which, that you might be ſaved, has thrown me down in the middle of my courſe.

THIS is the Idea you ought to have of a Fugitive, who endeavours to deprive you of the hope of ſeeing him any more. But when Love has once been ſincere, how difficult is it to determine to love no more? 'Tis a thouſand times more eaſy to renounce the World than Love. I hate this deceitful faithleſs World; I think no more of it; but my Heart ſtill wandring, will eternally make me feel the Anguiſh of having loſt you, in ſpite of all the Convictions of my Underſtanding. In the mean time, tho' I ſhould be ſo cowardly as to retract what you have read, do not ſuffer me to offer myſelf to your Thoughts, but under this laſt Notion. Remember my laſt Endeavours were to ſeduce your Heart. You periſhed by my means, and I with you. The ſame Waves ſwallowed us both up. We waited for Death with Indifference, and the ſame Death had carry'd us headlong to the ſame Puniſhments. But Providence has turned off this Blow, and our Shipwreck has thrown us into a Haven. There are Some whom the Mercy of God ſaves by Afflictions. Let my Salvation be the Fruit of your Prayers! Let me owe it to your Tears or exemplary Holineſs! Tho' my Heart, Lord! be filled with the Love of one of thy Creatures, thy Hand can when it pleaſes draw out of it thoſe Ideas which fill its whole Capacity. To love Heloiſe truly, is to leave her intirely to that Quiet which Retirement and Virtue afford. I have reſolved it; this Letter ſhall be my laſt Fault. Adieu.

If I die here, I will give Orders that my Body be carried to the Houſe of the Paraclete. You ſhall ſee me in that condition; not to demand Tears from you, 'twill then be too late; weep rather for me now, to extinguiſh that Fire which burns me. You ſhall ſee me, to ſtrengthen your Piety by the Horror of this Carcaſe, and my Death then more Eloquent than I can be, will tell you what you love, when you love a Man. I hope you will be contented, when you have finiſhed this moral Life, to be buried near me. Your cold Aſhes need then fear nothing, and my Tomb will by that means be more Rich and more Renown'd.

LETTER IV.

HELOISE to ABELARD.

In the following Letter the Paſſion of Heloiſe breaks out with more Violence than ever. That which ſhe had receiv'd from Abelard, inſtead of fortifying her Reſolutions, ſerv'd only to revive in her Memory all their paſt Endearments and Misfortunes. With this Impreſſion, ſhe writes again to her Husband; and appears now, not ſo much in the Character of a Religious, ſtriving with the Remains of her former Weakneſs, as in that of an unhappy Woman abandon'd to all the Tranſports of Love and Deſpair.

To Abelard her well-beloved in Chriſt Jeſus, from Heloiſe his well-beloved in the ſame Chriſt Jeſus.

I Read the Letter I received from you with abundance of Impatience: In ſpite of all my Misfortunes, I hoped to find nothing in it beſides Arguments of Comfort. But how ingenious are Lovers in tormenting themſelves! Judge of the exquiſite Senſibility and Force of my Love, Love, by that which cauſes the Grief of my Soul. I was diſturb'd at the Superſcription of your Letter; Why did you place the Name of Heloiſe before that of Abelard? What means this cruel and unjuſt Diſtinction? 'Twas your Name only, the Name of a Father, and of a Husband, which my eager Eyes ſought after. I did not look for my own, which I had much rather, if poſſible, forget, as being the Cauſe of your Misfortune. The Rules of Decorum, and the Character of Maſter and Director which you have over me, oppoſed that Ceremonious Manner of addreſſing me; and Love commanded you to baniſh it: Alas! you know all this but too well.

DID you write thus to me before cruel Fortune had ruined my Happineſs? I ſee your Heart has deſerted me, and you have made greater Advances in the way of Devotion than I could wiſh: Alas! I am too weak to follow you; condeſcend at leaſt to ſtay for me, and animate me with your Advice. Will you have the Cruelty to abandon me? The Fear of this ſtabs my Heart: But the fearful Preſages you make at the latter end of your Letter, thoſe terrible Images you draw of your Death, quite diſtract me. Cruel Abelard! you ought to have ſtop'd my Tears, and you make them flow. You ought to have quieted the Diſorder of my Heart, and you throw me into Deſpair.

You deſire that after your Death I ſhould take care of your Aſhes, and pay them the laſt Duties. Alas! in what Temper did you conceive theſe mournful Ideas? And how could you deſcribe them to me? Did not the Apprehenſion of cauſing my preſent Death make the Pen drop from your Hand? You did not reflect, I ſuppoſe, upon all thoſe Torments to which you were going to deliver me. Heaven, as ſevere as it has been againſt me, is not in ſo great a Degree ſo, as to permit me to live one Moment after you. Life, without my Abelard, is an unſupportable Puniſhment, and Death a moſt exquiſite Happineſs, if by that Means I can be united with him. If Heaven hears the Prayers I continually make for you, your Days will be prolonged, and you will bury me.

Is it not your Part to prepare me by your powerful Exhortations againſt that great Criſis,

Digitized by Google

Criſis, which ſhakes the moſt reſolute and confirmed Minds? Is it not your Part to receive my laſt Sighs, take care of my Funeral, and give an Account of my Manners and Faith? Who but you can recommend us worthily to God, and by the Fervour and Merit of your Prayers, conduct thoſe Souls to him which you have joined to his Worſhip by ſolemn Contracts? We expect theſe pious Offices from your Paternal Charity. After this you will be free from thoſe Diſquietudes which now moleſt you, and you will quit Life with more Eaſe whenever it ſhall pleaſe God to call you away. You may follow us content with what you have done, and in a full Aſſurance of our Happineſs. But 'till then write not to me any ſuch terrible Things: Are we not already ſufficiently miſerable? Muſt we aggravate our Sorrows? Our Life here is but a languiſhing Death; will you haſten it? Our preſent Diſgraces are ſufficient to employ our Thoughts continually, and ſhall we ſeek for new Arguments of Grief in Futurities? How void of Reaſon are Men, ſaid Seneca, to make diſtant Evils preſent by Reflection, and to take pains before Death to loſe all the Comforts of Life?

WHEN you have finiſhed your Courſe here below, you ſay it is your Deſire that your Body be carried to the Houſe of the Paraclete; to the intent that being always expoſed to my Eyes, you may be for ever preſent to my Mind; and that your dead Body may ſtrengthen our Piety, and animate our Prayers. Can you think that the Traces you have drawn in my Heart can ever be worn out; or that any length of time can obliterate the Memory we have here of your Benefits? And what time ſhall I find for thoſe Prayers you ſpeak of? alas, I ſhall then be filled with other Cares. Can ſo heavy a Misfortune leave me a Moment's Quiet? Can my feeble Reaſon reſiſt ſuch powerful Aſſaults? When I am diſtracted and raving, (if I dare ſay it) even againſt Heaven it ſelf, I ſhall not ſoften it by my Prayers, but rather provoke it by my Cries and Reproaches! But how ſhould I pray: Or how bear up againſt my Grief? I ſhould be more urgent to follow you, than to pay you the ſad Ceremonies of Burial. It is for you, for

Abelard, that I have resolved to live; if you are ravished from me, what use can I make of my miserable Days? Alas! What Lamentations should I make, if Heaven, by a cruel Pity, should preserve me 'till that Moment? When I but think of this last Separation, I feel all the Pangs of Death; what shall I be then, if I should see this dreadful Hour? Forbear therefore to infuse into my Mind such mournful Thoughts, if not for Love, at least for Pity.

You desire me to give myself up to my Duty, and to be wholly God's, to whom I am consecrated. How can I do that, when you frighten me with Apprehensions that continually possess my Mind Day and Night? When an Evil threatens us, and it is impossible to ward it off, why do we give up ourselves to the unprofitable Fear of it, which is yet even more tormenting than the Evil itself?

What have I to hope for after the Loss of you? What can confine me to Earth, when Death shall have taken away from me all that was dear upon it? I have renounced without difficulty all the Charms of Life, preserving only my Love, and the secret Pleasure of thinking incessantly of you, and hearing that you live. And yet, alas! you do not live for me, and I dare not even flatter myself with the Hopes that I shall ever enjoy a sight of you more! This is the greatest of my Afflictions: Merciless Fortune! Hast thou not persecuted me enough? Thou dost not give me any Respite; thou hast exhausted all thy Vengeance upon me, and reserved thyself nothing whereby thou may'st appear terrible to others. Thou hast wearied thy self in tormenting me, and others have nothing now to fear from thy Anger. But to what purpose dost thou still arm thyself against me? The Wounds I have already received leave no room for new ones; why cannot I urge thee to kill me? Or dost thou fear, amidst the numerous Torments thou heapest on me, dost thou fear that such a Stroke would deliver me from all? Therefore thou preservest me from Death, in order to make me die every Moment.

DEAR Abelard, pity my Despair! Was ever any thing so miserable! The higher you raised me above other Women who envied me your Love, the more sensible am

am I now of the Loss of your Heart. I was exalted to the top of Happiness, only that I might have a more terrible Fall. Nothing cou'd formerly be compared to my Pleasures, and nothing now can equal my Misery. My Glory once raised the Envy of my Rivals; my present Wretchedness moves the Compassion of all that see me. My Fortune has been always in extremes, she has heaped on me her most delightful Favours, that she might load me with the greatest of her Afflictions. Ingenious in tormenting me, she has made the Memory of the Joys I have lost, an inexhaustible Spring of my Tears. Love, which possest was her greatest Gift, being taken away, occasions all my Sorrow. In short, her Malice has entirely succeeded, and I find my present Afflictions proportionably bitter as the Transports which charmed me were sweet.

But what aggravates my Sufferings yet more, is, that we began to be miserable at a time when we seemed the least to deserve it. While we gave ourselves up to the Enjoyment of a Criminal love, nothing opposed our vicious Pleasures. But ſcarce had we retrench'd what was unlawful in our Paſſion, and taken Refuge in Marriage againſt that Remorſe which might have purſu'd us, but the whole Wrath of Heaven fell on us in all its Weight. But how barbarous was your Puniſhment? The very Remembrance makes me ſhake with Horror. Could an outrageous Husband make a Villain ſuffer more that had diſhonoured his Bed? Ah! what right had a cruel Uncle over us? We were joined to each other even before the Altar, which ſhould have protected you from the Rage of your Enemies. Muſt a Wife draw on you that Puniſhment which ought not to fall on any but an Adulterous Lover? Beſides, we were ſeparated; you were buſy in your Exerciſes, and inſtructed a learned Auditory in Myſteries which the greateſt Genius's before you were not able to penetrate; and I, in obedience to you, retired to a Cloiſter. I there ſpent whole Days in thinking of you, and ſometimes meditating on holy Leſſons, to which I endeavoured to apply myſelf. In this very Juncture you became the Victim of the moſt unhappy Love. You alone

lone expiated the Crime common to us both: You only were puniſhed, tho' both of us were guilty. You, who were leaſt ſo, was the Object of the whole Vengeance of a barbarous Man. But why ſhould I rave at your Aſſaſſins? I, wretched I, have ruined you, I have been the Original of all your Misfortunes! Good Heav'n! Why was I born to be the Occaſion of ſo Tragical an Accident? How dangerous is it for a great Man to ſuffer himſelf to be moved by our Sex! He ought from his Infancy to be inured to Inſenſibility of Heart, againſt all our Charms. Hearken, my Son, (ſaid formerly the wiſeſt of Men) attend and keep my Inſtructions; if a beautiful Woman by her Looks endeavour to intice thee, permit not thyſelf to be overcome by a corrupt Inclination; reject the Poiſon ſhe offers, and follow not the Paths which ſhe directs. Her Houſe is the Gate of Deſtruction and Death. I have long examined Things, and have found that Death itſelf is a leſs dangerous Evil than Beauty. 'Tis the Shipwreck of Liberty, a fatal Snare, from which it is impoſſible ever to get free. 'Twas Woman which threw down down the first Man from that glorious Condition in which Heaven had placed him. She who was created in order to partake of his Happiness, was the sole Cause of his Ruin. How bright had been thy Glory, Sampson, if thy Heart had been as firm against the Charms of Dalilah, as against the Weapons of the Philistins! A Woman disarmed and betrayed thee, who hadst been a glorious Conqueror of Armies. Thou saw'st thyself delivered into the Hands of thy Enemies; thou wast deprived of thy Eyes, those Inlets of Love into thy Soul: Distracted and despairing didst thou die, without any Consolation but that of involving thy Enemies in thy Destruction. Solomon, that he might please Women, forsook the Care of pleasing God. That King, whose Wisdom Princes came from all Parts to admire, he whom God had chose to build him a Temple, abandon'd the Worship of those very Altars he had defended, and proceeded to such a pitch of Folly as even to burn Incense to Idols. Job had no Enemy more cruel than his Wife; What Temptations did he not bear? The evil Spirit who had declared himhimſelf his Perſecutor, employed a Woman as an Inſtrument to ſhake his Conſtancy. And the ſame evil Spirit made Heloiſe an Inſtrument to ruin Abelard! All the poor Comfort I have is, that I am not the voluntary Cauſe of your Misfortunes. I have not betray'd you; but my Conſtancy and Love have been deſtructive to you. If I have committed a Crime in having lov'd you with Conſtancy, I ſhall never be able to repent of that Crime. Indeed I gave myſelf up too much to the Captivity of thoſe ſoft Errors into which my riſing Paſſion ſeduced me. I have endeavour'd to pleaſe you, even at the Expence of my Virtue, and therefore deſerve thoſe Pains I feel. My guilty Tranſports cou'd not but have a Tragical End. As ſoon as I was perſwaded of your Love, alas, I ſcarce delay'd a Moment reſigning myſelf to all your Proteſtations: To be beloved by Abelard, was, in my Eſteem, too much Glory, and I too impatiently deſired it, not to believe it immediately. I endeavoured at nothing but convincing you of my utmoſt Paſſion. I made no uſe of thoſe Defences of Diſdain and Honour; thoſe Enemies of Pleaſure which which tyrannize over our Sex, made in me but a weak and unprofitable Reſiſtance. I ſacrificed all to my Love, and I forc'd my Duty to give place to the Ambition of making happy the moſt gallant and learned Perſon of the Age. If any Conſideration had been able to ſtop me, it would have been without doubt the Intereſt of my Love. I fear'd leaſt having nothing further for you to deſire, your Paſſion might become languid, and you might ſeek for new Pleaſures in ſome new Conqueſt. But it was eaſie for you to cure me of a Suſpicion ſo oppoſite to my own Inclination. I ought to have foreſeen other more certain Evils; and to have conſider'd that the Idea of loſt Enjoyments would be the Trouble of my whole Life.

How happy ſhould I be, could I waſh out with my Tears the Memory of thoſe Pleaſures, which yet I think of with Delight? At leaſt I will exert ſome generous Endeavour, and by ſmothering in my Heart thoſe Deſires to which the Frailty of my Nature may give Birth, I will exerciſe Torments upon myſelf, like thoſe the Rage of your Enemies has made you ſuffer.

Digitized by Google

I will endeavour by that Means to ſatisfie you at leaſt, if I cannot appeaſe an angry God. For to ſhew you what a deplorable Condition I am in, and how far my Repentance is from being available, I dare even accuſe Heaven every moment of Cruelty, for delivering you into thoſe Snares which were prepared for you. My Repinings kindle the Divine Wrath, when I ſhou'd endeavour to draw down Mercy.

In order to expiate a Crime, 'tis not ſufficient that we bear the Puniſhment; whatever we ſuffer is accounted as nothing, if the Paſſions ſtill continue, and the Heart is inflam'd with the ſame Deſires. 'Tis an eaſie Matter to confeſs a Weakneſs, and to inflict ſome Puniſhment upon ourſelves; but 'tis the laſt Violence to our Nature to extinguiſh the Memory of Pleaſures, which by a ſweet Habit have gain'd abſolute Poſſeſſion of our Minds. How many Perſons do we obſerve who make an outward Confeſſion of their Faults, yet far from being afflicted for them, take a new Pleaſure in the relating them. Bitterneſs of Heart ought to accompany the Confeſſion of the Mouth, yet that very rarely happens. I, who have exexperienced ſo many Pleaſures in loving you, feel, in ſpite of myſelf, that I cannot repent of them, nor forbear enjoying them over again as much as is poſſible, by recollecting them in my Memory. Whatever Endeavours I uſe, on whatever ſide I turn me, the ſweet Idea ſtill purſues me, and every Object brings to my Mind what I ought to forget. During the ſtill Night, when my Heart ought to be quiet in the midſt of Sleep, which ſuſpends the greateſt Diſturbances, I cannot avoid thoſe Illuſions my Heart entertains. I think I am ſtill with my dear Abelard. I ſee him, I ſpeak to him, and hear him anſwer. Charmed with each other, we quit our Philoſophick Studies to entertain ourſelves with our Paſſion. Sometimes too I ſeem to be a Witneſs of the bloody Enterprize of your Enemies; I oppoſe their Fury, I fill our Apartment with fearful Cries, and in the Moment I awake in Tears. Even into holy Places before the Altar I carry with me the Memory of our guilty Loves. They are my whole Buſineſs, and far from lamenting for having been ſeduced, I ſigh for having loſt them.

Digitized by Google

I remember (for nothing is forgot by Lovers) the Time and Place in which you firſt declared your Love to me, and ſwore you would love me till Death. Your Words, your Oaths, are all deeply graven in my Heart. The Diſorder of my Diſcourſe diſcovers to every one the Trouble of my Mind. My Sighs betray me; and your Name is continually in my Mouth. When I am in this Condition, why doſt not thou, O Lord! pity my Weakneſs, and ſtrengthen me by thy Grace? You are happy, Abelard, this Grace has prevented you; and your Misfortune has been the Occaſion of your finding Reſt. The Puniſhment of your Body, has cured the deadly Wounds of your Soul. The Tempeſt has driven you into the Haven. God, who ſeemed to lay his Hand heavily upon you, ſought only to help you: He is a Father Chaſtizing, and not an Enemy Revening; a wiſe Phyſician, putting you to ſome Pain in order to preſerve your Life. I am a thouſand times more to be lamented than you; I have a thouſand Paſſions to combat with. I muſt reſiſt thoſe Fires which Love kindles in a young Heart. Our Sex is nothing but Weak-

Digitized by Google

Weakneſs, and I have the greater Difficulty to defend myſelf, becauſe the Enemy that attacks me pleaſes me; I doat on the Danger which threatens me, how then can I avoid falling?

In the midſt of theſe Struggles, I endeavour at leaſt to conceal my Weakneſs from thoſe you have entruſted to my Care. All who are about me admire my Virtue, but could their Eyes penetrate into my Heart, what would they not diſcover? My Paſſions there are in a Rebellion; I preſide over others, but cannot rule myſelf. I have but a falſe Covering, and this ſeeming Virtue is a real Vice. Men judge me praiſe-worthy, but I am guilty before God, from whoſe All-ſeeing Eye nothing is hid, and who views, through all their Foldings, the Secrets of all Hearts. I cannot eſcape his Diſcovery. And yet it is a great deal to me to maintain even this Appearance of Virtue. This troubleſome Hypocriſie is in ſome ſort commendable. I give no Scandal to the World, which is ſo eaſy to take bad Impreſſions. I do not ſhake the Virtue of theſe feeble Ones who are under my Conduct. With my Heart full of the Love of Man, I exhort them at leaſt to love only God: Charmed with the Pomp of worldly Pleaſures, I endeavour to ſhew them that they are all Deceit and Vanity. I have juſt Strength enough to conceal from them my Inclinations, and I look upon that as a powerful Effect of Grace. If it is not ſufficient to make me embrace Virtue, 'tis enough to keep me from committing Sin.

And yet it is in vain to endeavour to ſeparate theſe two things. They muſt be guilty who merit nothing; and they depart from Virtue who delay to approach it. Beſides, we ought to have no other Motive than the Love of God; alas! what can I then hope for? I own, to my Confuſion, I fear more the offending a Man, than the provoking God, and ſtudy leſs to pleaſe him than you. Yes, 'twas your Command only, and not a ſincere Vocation, as is imagined, that ſhut me up in theſe Cloiſters. I ſought to give you Eaſe, and not to ſanctify myſelf. How unhappy am I? I tear myſelf from all that pleaſes me; I bury myſelf here alive, I exerciſe myſelf in the moſt rigid Faſtings, and and ſuch Severities as cruel Laws impoſe on us; I feed myſelf with Tears and Sorrows; and notwithſtanding this I deſerve nothing for all the Hardſhips I ſuffer. My falſe Piety has long deceived you as well as others; you have thought me eaſy, yet I was more diſturbed than ever. You perſwaded yourſelf I was wholly taken up with my Duty, yet I had no Buſineſs but Love. Under this Miſtake you deſire my Prayers; alas! I muſt expect yours. Do not preſume upon my Virtue and my Care. I am wavering, and you muſt fix me by your Advice. I am yet feeble, you muſt ſuſtain and guide me by your Counſel.

WHAT Occaſion had you to praiſe me? Praiſe is often hurtful to thoſe on whom it is beſtowed. A ſecret Vanity ſprings up in the Heart, blinds us, and conceals from us Wounds that are ill cured. A Seducer flatters us, and at the ſame time aims at our Deſtruction. A ſincere Friend diſguiſes nothing from us, and far from paſſing a light Hand over the Wound, makes us feel it the more intenſly, by applying Remedies. Why do you not deal after this manner with me? Will you be eſteemed a baſe dan-dangerous Flatterer; or if you chance to ſee any thing commendable in me, have you no fear that Vanity, which is ſo natural to all Women, ſhould quite efface it? But let us not judge of Virtue by outward Appearances, for then the Reprobate as well as the Elect may lay claim to it. An artful Impoſtor may by his Addreſs gain more Admiration, than the true Zeal of a Saint.

THE Heart of Man is a Labyrinth whoſe Windings are very difficult to be diſcover'd. The Praiſes you give me are the more dangerous, in regard that I love the Perſon who gives them. The more I deſire to pleaſe you, the readier am I to believe all the Merit you attribute to me. Ah, think rather how to ſupport my Weakneſſes by wholſome Remonſtrances! Be rather fearful than confident of my Salvation; ſay our Virtue is founded upon Weakneſs, and that thoſe only will be crowned who have fought with the greateſt Difficulties: But I ſeek not for that Crown which is the Reward of Victory, I am content to avoid only the Danger. It is eaſier to keep off, than to win a Battle. There are ſeveral Degrees in Glory, and I am not ambitious of the higheſt; thoſe I leave to Souls of great Courage, who have been often Victorious. I ſeek not to Conquer, out of fear leaſt I ſhould be overcome. Happy enough, if I can eſcape Shipwreck, and at laſt gain the Port. Heaven commands me to renounce that fatal Paſſion which unites me to you; but oh! my Heart will never be able to conſent to it. Adieu.

HELOISE to ABELARD.

Heloiſe had been dangerouſly Ill at the Convent of the Paraclete: Immediately upon her Recovery, ſhe wrote this Letter to Abelard. She ſeems now to have diſingaged herſelf from him, and to have reſolved to think of nothing but Repentance; yet diſcovers ſome Emotions, which make it doubtful, whether Devotion had entirely triumphed over her Paſſion.

DEAR Abelard, you expect perhaps that I ſhould accuſe you of Negligence. You have not anſwer'd my laſt Letter, and Thanks to Heaven, in the Condition I now am, 'tis a Happineſs to me that you ſhew ſo much Inſenſibility for the fatal Paſſion which had ingaged me to you; at laſt, Abelard, you have loſt Heloiſe for ever: Notwithſtanding all the Oaths I made to think of nothing but you only, and to be entertain'd with nothing but you, I have baniſhed you from my Thoughts, I have forgot you. Thou charming Idea of a Lover I once adored, thou wilt no more be my Happineſs! Dear Image of Abelard! thou wilt no more follow me every where, I will no more remember thee. O celebrated Merit of a Man, who in ſpite of his Enemies, is the Wonder of his Age! O enchanting Pleaſures to which Heloiſe entirely reſign'd her ſelf, you, you have been my Tormentors. I confeſs, Abelard, without a bluſh, my Infidelity: Let my Inconſtancy teach the World that there is no depending upon the Promiſes of Women; they are all ſubject to change. This troubles you, Abelard; this News without doubt ſurprizes you; you could never imagine Heloiſe ſhould be inconſtant. She was prejudiced by ſo ſtrong an Inclination to you, that you cannot conceive how Time could alter it. But be undeceived, I am going to diſcover to you my Falſeneſs, tho' inſtead of reproaching me, I perſwade myſelf you will ſhed Tears of Joy. When I ſhall have told you what Rival hath raviſhed my Heart from you, you will praiſe my Inconſtancy, and will pray this Rival to fix it: By this you may judge that 'tis God alone that takes Heloiſe

Heloiſe from you. Yes, my Dear Abelard, he gives my Mind that Tranquility which a quick Remembrance of our Misfortunes wou'd not ſuffer me to enjoy. Juſt Heaven! What other Rival could take me from you? Could you imagine it poſſible for any Mortal to blot you from my Heart? Could you think me guilty of Sacrificing the Virtuous and Learned Abelard to any other but to God? No, I believe you have done me Juſtice in this Point. I queſtion not but you are impatient to know what Means God uſed to accompliſh ſo great an End; I will tell you, and wonder at the ſecret Ways of Providence. Some few Days after you ſent me your laſt Letter I fell dangerouſly Ill, the Phyſicians gave me over; and I expected certain Death. Then it was, that my Paſſion, which always before ſeemed innocent, appeared criminal to me. My Memory repreſented faithfully to me all the paſt Actions of my Life, and I confeſs to you, my Love was the only Pain I felt. Death, which 'till then I had always conſider'd as at a Diſtance, now preſented it ſelf to me ſuch as it appears to Sinners. I began to dread the Wrath of God, now I was going to experience it; and I repented I had made no better Uſe of his Grace. Thoſe tender Letters I have wrote to you, and thoſe paſſionate Converſations I have had with you, gave me as much Pain now, as they formerly did Pleaſure. Ah miſerable Heloiſe, ſaid I, if it is a Crime to give ones ſelf up to ſuch ſoft Tranſports; and if after this Life is ended, Puniſhment certainly follows them, why didſt thou not reſiſt ſo dangerous an Inclination? Think on the Tortures that are prepared for thee, conſider with Terror that Store of Torments, and recollect at the ſame time thoſe Pleaſures which thy deluded Soul thought ſo entrancing. Ah, purſued I, doſt thou not almoſt deſpair for having rioted in ſuch falſe Pleaſures? In ſhort, Abelard, imagine all the Remorſe of Mind I ſuffered, and you will not be aſtoniſhed at my Change.

SOLITUDE is inſupportable to a Mind which is not eaſie, its Troubles increaſe in the midſt of Silence, and Retirement heightens them. Since I have been ſhut up within theſe Walls, I have done nothing but weep for our Misfortunes. This Cloy-ſter has reſounded with my Cries, and like a Wretch condemned to eternal Slavery, I have worn out my Days in Grief and Sighing. Inſtead of fulfilling God's merciful Deſign upon me, I have offended him; I have look'd upon this Sacred Refuge, like a frightful Priſon, and have born with Unwillingneſs the Yoke of the Lord. Inſtead of ſanctifying myſelf by a Life of Penitence, I have confirm'd my Reprobation. What a fatal Wandring! But, Abelard, I have torn off the Bandage which blinded me, and if I dare rely upon the Emotions which I have felt, I have made myſelf worthy of your Eſteem. You are no more that Amorous Abelard, who to gain a private Converſation with me by Night, uſed inceſſantly to contrive new Ways to deceive the Vigilance of our Obſervers. The Misfortune which happened to you after ſo many happy Moments gave you a Horror for Vice, and you inſtantly conſecrated the reſt of your Days to Virtue, and ſeemed to ſubmit to this Neceſſity willingly. I indeed, more tender than you, and more ſenſible of ſoft Pleaſures, bore this Misfortune with extream Impatience; you have heard my Exclamations againſt your Enemies. You have ſeen my whole Reſentment in thoſe Letters I wrote to you. 'Twas this without doubt which deprived me of the Eſteem of my Abelard: You were alarm'd at my Tranſports, and if you will confeſs the Truth, you perhaps deſpair'd of my Salvation. You could not foreſee that Heloiſe would conquer ſo reigning a Paſſion; but you have been miſtaken, Abelard; my Weakneſs, when ſupported by Grace, hath not hinder'd me from obtaining a compleat Victory. Reſtore me then to your good Opinion; your own Piety ought to ſolicit you to this.

But what ſecret Trouble riſes in my Soul, what unthought-of Motion oppoſes the Reſolution I have formed of ſighing no more for Abelard? Juſt Heaven! Have I not yet triumphed over my Love? Unhappy Heloiſe! as long as thou draweſt a Breath it is decreed thou muſt love Abelard; weep, unfortunate Wretch that thou art, thou never hadſt a more juſt Occaſion. Now I ought to die with Grief; Grace had overtaken me, and I had promiſed to be faithful to it, but I now perjure jure myſelf, and ſacrifice even Grace to Abelard. This ſacrilegious Sacrifice fills up the Meaſure of my Iniquities. After this can I hope God ſhould open to me the Treaſures of his Mercy? Have I not tired out his Forgiveneſs? I began to offend him from the Moment I firſt ſaw Abelard; an unhappy Sympathy engaged us both in a criminal Commerce; and God raiſed us up an Enemy to ſeparate us. I lament and hate the Misfortune which hath lighted upon us, and adore the Cauſe. Ah, I ought rather to explain this Accident as the ſecret Ordinance of Heaven, which diſapproved of our Engagement, and apply myſelf to extirpate my Paſſion. How much better were it intirely to forget the Object of it, than to preſerve the Memory of it, ſo fatal to the Quiet of my Life, and Salvation? Great God! Shall Abelard always poſſeſs my Thought, can I never free myſelf from thoſe Chains which bind me to him? But perhaps I am unreaſonably afraid; Virtue directs all my Motions, and they are all ſubject to Grace. Fear no more, dear Abelard, I have no longer any of thoſe Sentiments, which being deſcribed in my Letters have occaſioned you ſo much Trouble. I will no more endeavour, by the Relation of thoſe Pleaſures our new-born Paſſion gave us, to awaken that criminal Fondneſs you may have for me. I free you from all your Oaths; forget the Names of Lover and Husband, but keep always that of Father. I expect no more from you thoſe tender Proteſtations, and thoſe Letters ſo proper to keep up the Commerce of Love. I demand nothing of you but ſpiritual Advice and wholſome Directions. The Path of Holineſs, however Thorny it may be, will yet appear agreeable when I walk in your Steps. You will always find me ready to follow you. I ſhall read with more Pleaſure the Letters in which you ſhall deſcribe to me the advantages of Virtue, than ever I did thoſe by which you ſo artfully inſtilled the fatal Poiſon of our Paſſion. You cannot now be ſilent, without a Crime. When I was poſſeſs'd with ſo violent a Love, and preſs'd you ſo earneſtly to write to me, how many Letters did I ſend you before I could obtain one from you? You deny'd me in my Miſery the only Comfort which

which was left me, becauſe you thought it pernicious. You endeavour'd by Severities to force me to forget you, nor can I blame you; but now you have nothing to fear. A lucky Diſeaſe, which Providence ſeem'd to have chaſtiz'd me with for my Sanctification, hath done what all human Efforts, and your Cruelty, in vain attempted. I ſee now the Vanity of that Happineſs which we had ſet our Hearts upon, as if we were never to have loſt it. What Fears, what Uneaſineſs have we been oblig'd to ſuffer!

No, Lord, there is no Pleaſure upon Earth, but that which Virtue gives! The Heart amidſt all Worldly Delights feels a Sting, 'tis uneaſie, and reſtleſs, 'till fixed on thee. What have I not ſuffer'd, Abelard, while I kept alive in my Retirement thoſe Fires which ruined me in the World? I ſaw with Horror the Walls which ſurround me, the Hours ſeem'd as long as Years. I repented a thouſand times the having buried myſelf here. But ſince Grace has opened my Eyes all the Scene is changed. Solitude looks charming, and the Tranquility which I behold here enters my very Heart. In the Satisfaction of doing my Duty I feel a Pleaſure, above all that Riches, Pomp, or Senſuality could afford. My Quiet has indeed coſt me dear, I have bought it even at the Price of my Love, I have offered a violent Sacrifice, and which ſeem'd above my Power. I have torn you from my Heart, and be not Jealous; God reigns there in your ſtead, who ought always to have poſſeſs'd it entire. Be content with having a Place in my Mind, which you ſhall never loſe; I ſhall always take a ſecret Pleaſure in thinking of you, and eſteem it a Glory to obey thoſe Rules you ſhall give me.

THIS very moment I receive a Letter from you; I will read it, and anſwer it immediately. You ſhall ſee by my Exactneſs in writing to you, that you are always dear to me——You very obligingly reproach me for delaying ſo long to write you any News; My Illneſs muſt excuſe that. I omit no opportunities of giving you Marks of my Remembrance. I thank you for the Uneaſineſs you ſay my Silence cauſed you, and the kind Fears you expreſs preſs concerning my Health. Yours, you tell me, is but weakly, and you thought lately you ſhou'd have dy'd. With what Indifference, cruel Man, do you acquaint me with a thing ſo certain to afflict me? I told you in my former Letter how unhappy I ſhould be if you died; and if you loved me, you would moderate the Rigour of your Auſtere Life. I repreſented to you the occaſion I had for your Advice, and conſequently the Reaſon there was you ſhould take care of yourſelf. But I will not tire you with the repetition of the ſame things. You deſire us not to forget you in our Prayers. Ah, dear Abelard, you may depend upon the Zeal of this Society, 'tis devoted to you, and you cannot juſtly charge it with forgetfulneſs. You are our Father, we your Children: You are our Guide, and we reſign ourſelves with aſſurance in your Piety. You Command, we Obey; we faithfully execute what you have prudently directed. We impoſe no Penance on ourſelves but what you recommend, leſt we ſhould rather follow an indiſcreet Zeal than ſolid Virtue. In a word, nothing is thought rightly done, it if without Abelard's Approbation. You inform me of one thing that perplexes me, that you have heard that ſome of our Siſters gave bad Examples, and that there is a general Looſeneſs amongſt them. Ought this to ſeem ſtrange to you, who know how Monaſteries are fill'd now-a-days? Do Fathers conſult the Inclinations of their Children when they ſettle them? Are not Intereſt and Policy their only Rules? This is the Reaſon that Monaſteries are often filled with thoſe who are a Scandal to them. But I conjure you to tell me what are the Irregularities you have head of, and to teach me a proper Remedy for them. I have not yet obſerved that Looſeneſs you mention; when I have, I will take due care. I walk my Rounds every Night, and make thoſe I catch abroad return to their Chambers; for I remember all the Adventures which happen'd in the Monaſteries near Paris. You end your Letter with a general deploring of your Unhappineſs, and wiſh for Death as the end of a troubleſome Life. Is it poſſible a Genius ſo great as yours ſhould never get above his paſt Misfortunes? What would the

the World ſay ſhould they read your Letters as I do? Wou'd they conſider the noble Motive of your Retirement, or not rather think you had ſhut yourſelf up only to lament the Condition to which my Uncle's Revenge had reduced you? What would your young Pupils ſay who come ſo far to hear you, and prefer your ſevere Lectures to the ſoftneſs of a Worldly Life, if they ſhould ſee you ſecretly a Slave to your Paſſions, and ſenſible of all thoſe Weakneſſes from which your Rules can ſecure them? This Abelard they ſo much admire, this great Perſonage which guides them, wou'd loſe his Fame, and become the Scorn of his Pupils. If theſe Reaſons are not ſufficient to give you Conſtancy in your Misfortunes, caſt your Eyes upon me and admire my Reſolution of ſhutting my ſelf up by your Example. I was young when we were ſeparated, and (if I dare believe what you were always telling me) worthy of any Gentleman's Affections. If I had loved nothing in Abelard but ſenſual Pleaſure, a thouſand agreeable young Men might have comforted me upon my Loſs of him. You know what I have done,

excuſe me therefore from repeating it; think of thoſe Aſſurances I gave you of loving you with the utmoſt tenderneſs. I dried your Tears with Kiſſes, and becauſe you were leſs powerful I became leſs reſerv'd. Ah if you had loved with Delicacy, the Oaths I made, the Tranſports I accompany'd them with, the innocent Careſſes I profuſely gave you, all this ſure might have comforted you. Had you obſerv'd me to grow by degrees indifferent to you, you might have had reaſon to deſpair, but you never received greater Marks of my Paſſion, than after that cruel Revenge upon you.

Let me ſee no more in your Letters, dear Abelard, ſuch Murmurs againſt Fortune; you are not the only one ſhe has Perſecuted, and you ought to forget her Outrages. What a Shame is it for a Philoſopher not to be comforted for an Accident which might happen to any Man. Govern yourſelf by my Example. I was born with violent Paſſions; I daily ſtrive with the moſt tender Emotions, and glory in triumphing and ſubjecting them to Reaſon: Muſt a weak Mind fortifie one that is so much superior? But whither am I transported? Is this Discourse directed to my dear Abelard? One that practises all those Virtues he teaches? If you complain of Fortune, 'tis not so much that you feel her strokes, as that you cannot shew your Enemies how much to blame they were in attempting to hurt you. Leave them, Abelard, to exhaust their Malice, and continue to Charm your Auditors. Discover those Treasures of Learning Heaven seems to have reserved for you; your Enemies, struck with the Splendor of your Reasoning, will do you Justice. How happy should I be could I see all the World as entirely persuaded of your Probity as I am. Your Learning is allow'd by all the World; your greatest Enemies confess you are ignorant of nothing that the Mind of Man is capable of knowing.

My dear Husband! (this is the last time I shall use that Expression) shall I never see you again? Shall I never have the Pleasure of embracing you before Death? What dost thou say, wretched Heloïse? dost thou know what thou desirest? Canst thou behold those lively Eyes, without re-collecting thoſe amorous Glances which have been ſo fatal to thee? Canſt thou view that Majeſtick Air of Abelard, without entertaining a Jealouſie of every one that ſees ſo charming a Man? that Mouth which cannot be look'd upon without Deſire; in ſhort, all the Perſon of Abelard cannot be view'd by any Woman without danger. Deſire therefore no more to ſee Abelard; if the Memory of him has cauſed thee ſo much Trouble, Heloiſe, what will not his Preſence do? What Deſires will it not excite in thy Soul? How will it be poſſible for thee to keep thy Reaſon at the ſight of ſo amiable a Man? I will own to you what makes the greateſt Pleaſure I have in my Retirement. After having paſs'd the Day in thinking of you, full of the dear Idea, I give myſelf up at Night to Sleep: Then it is that Heloiſe, who dares not without trembling think of you by Day, reſigns herſelf entirely to the Pleaſure of hearing you, and ſpeaking to you. I ſee you, Abelard, and glut my Eyes with the ſight; ſometimes you entertain me with the Story of your ſecret Troubles and Grievances, and create in me a ſenſible Sorrow; ſometimes forgetting the perpetual Obſtacles to our Deſires, you preſs me to make you happy, and I eaſily yield to your Tranſports. Sleep gives you what your Enemies Rage has deprived you of; and our Souls, animated with the ſame Paſſion, are ſenſible of the ſame Pleaſure. But oh you delightful Illuſions, ſoft Errors, how ſoon do you vaniſh away? At my awaking I open my Eyes and ſee no Abelard; I ſtretch out my Arm to take hold of him, but he is not there; I call him, he hears me not. What a Fool am I to tell you my Dreams, who are inſenſible of theſe Pleaſures? But do you, Abelard, never ſee Heloiſe in your Sleep? How does ſhe appear to you? Do you entertain her with the ſame tender Language as formerly, when Fulbert committed her to your Care? When you awake, are you pleaſed or ſorry? Pardon me, Abelard, pardon a miſtaken Lover. I muſt no more expect that Vivacity from you, which once animated all your Actions. 'Tis no more time to require from you a perfect Correſpondence of Deſires. We have bound ourſelves to ſevere Auſterities, and muſt follow follow them, let them coſt us ever ſo dear. Let us think of our Duties in theſe Rigours, and make a good uſe of that Neceſſity which keeps us ſeparate. You, Abelard, will happily finiſh your Courſe, your Deſires and Ambitions will be no Obſtacle to your Salvation. Heloiſe only muſt lament, ſhe only muſt weep without being certain whether all her Tears will be available or not to her Salvation.

I had like to have ended my Letter without acquainting you with what happened here a few Days ago. A young Nun, who was one of thoſe who are forced to take up with a Convent without any Examination whether it will ſuit with their Tempers or not, is by a Stratagem I know nothing of, eſcaped, and, as they ſay, fled with a young Gentleman ſhe was in Love with, into England. I have ordered all the Houſe to conceal the matter. Ah Abelard! if you were near us theſe Diſorders would not happen. All the Siſters, charmed with ſeeing and hearing you, would think of nothing but practiſing your Rules and Directions. The Young Nun had never formed ſo criminal a Deſign as that of break-breaking her Vows, had you been at our Head to exhort us to live holily. If your Eyes were Witneſſes of our Actions, they would be innocent. When we ſlipt, you would lift us up and eſtabliſh us by your Counſels; we ſhould march with ſure Steps in the rough Paths of Virtue. I begin to perceive, Abelard, that I take too much Pleaſure in writing to you. I ought to burn my Letter. It ſhews you I am ſtill engaged in a deep Paſſion for you, tho' at the beginning of it I deſign'd to perſuade you the contrary; I am ſenſible of the Motions both of Grace and Paſſion, and by turns yield to each. Have pity, Abelard, of the Condition to which you have brought me, and make in ſome meaſure the latter Days of my Life as quiet, as the firſt have been uneaſy and diſturbed.

LETTER VI.

ABELARD to HELOISE.

Abelard having at last conquer'd the Remains of his unhappy Passion, had determin'd to put an End to so dangerous a Correspondence as that between Heloise and himself. The following Letter therefore, tho' written with no less Concern than his former, is free from Mixtures of a Worldly Passion, and is full of the warmest Sentiments of Piety, and the most moving Exhortations.

WRITE no more to me, Heloise, write no more to me; 'tis time to end a Commerce which makes our Mortifications of no Advantage to us. We retired from the World to sanctify ourselves; and by a Conduct directly contrary to Christian Morality, we become odious to Jesus Christ. Let us no more deceive ourselves, by flattering ourselves with the Remembrance of our past Pleasures we shall make our Lives troublesome, and we shall be incapable of relishing the Sweets of Solitude. Let us make a good use of our Austerities, ſterities, and no longer preſerve the Ideas of our Crimes amongſt the Severities of Penitence. Let a Mortification of Body and Mind, a ſtrict Faſting, continual Solitude, profound and holy Meditations, and a ſincere Love of God, ſucceed our former Irregularities.

LET us try to carry Religious Perfection to a very difficult Point. 'Tis beautiful to find in Chriſtianity Minds ſo diſengaged from the Earth, from the Creatures and themſelves, that they ſeem to act independently of thoſe Bodies they are joined to, and to uſe them as their Slaves. We can never raiſe ourſelves to too great heights, when God is the Object. Be our Endeavours never ſo great, they will always come ſhort of reaching that exalted Divinity, which even our Apprehenſions cannot reach. Let us act for God's Glory, independent of the Creatures or ourſelves, without any regard to our own Deſires, or the Sentiments of others. Were we in this temper of Mind, Heloiſe, I would willingly make my Abode at the Paraclete. My earneſt Care for a Houſe I have founded, would draw a thouſand Bleſſings on it.

I would inſtruct it by my Words, and animate it by my Example. I would watch over the Lives of my Siſters, and would command nothing but what I my ſelf would perform. I would direct you to Pray, Meditate, Labour, and keep Vows of Silence; and I would myſelf Pray, Meditate, Labour, and be Silent.

HOWEVER when I ſpoke, it ſhould be to lift you up when you ſhould fall, to ſtrengthen you in your Weakneſſes, to enlighten you in that Darkneſs and Obſcurity which might at any time ſurpriſe you. I would comfort you under thoſe Severities uſed by Perſons of great Virtue. I would moderate the Vivacity of your Zeal and Piety, and give your Virtue an even Temperament: I would point out thoſe Duties which you ought to know, and ſatisfie you in thoſe Doubts which the Weakneſs of your Reaſon might occaſion. I would be your Maſter and Father; and by a marvelous Talent, I would become lively, ſlow, ſoft, or ſevere, according to the different Characters of thoſe I ſhould guide in the painful path of Chriſtian Perfection.

BUT

Digitized by Google

BUT whither does my vain Imagination carry me? Ah, Heloiſe! how far are we from ſuch a happy Temper? Your Heart ſtill burns with that fatal Fire which you cannot extinguiſh, and mine is full of Trouble and Uneaſineſs. Think not, Heloiſe, that I enjoy here a perfect Peace; I will, for the laſt time, open my Heart to you; I am not yet diſengaged from you; I fight againſt my exceſſive Tenderneſs for you, yet in ſpite of all my Endeavours, the remaining Frailty makes me but too ſenſible of your Sorrows, and gives me a ſhare in them. Your Letters have indeed moved me, I could not read with Indifference Characters wrote by that dear Hand. I ſigh, I weep, and all my Reaſon is ſcarce ſufficient to conceal my Weakneſs from my Pupils. This, unhappy Heloiſe! is the miſerable Condition of Abelard. The World, which generally errs in its Notions, thinks I am eaſy, and as if I had loved only in you the Gratification of Senſe, imagine I have now forgot you; but what a miſtake is this! People indeed were not miſtaken in thinking when we ſeparated, that Shame and Grief for having been ſo cruelly uſed made made me abandon the World. 'Twas not, as you know, a ſincere Repentance for having offended God, which inſpired me with a deſign of Retiring: However, I conſider'd the Accident which happen'd to us as a ſecret Deſign of Providence, to puniſh our Crimes; and only look'd upon Fulbert as the Inſtrument of Divine Vengeance. Grace drew me into an Aſylum, where I might yet have remain'd, if the Rage of my Enemies would have permitted: I have endured all their Perſecutions, not doubting but God himſelf raiſed them up in order to purifie me.

WHEN he ſaw me perfectly Obedient to his Holy Will, he permitted that I ſhould juſtify my Doctrine; I made its Purity publick, and ſhew'd in the end that my Faith was not only Orthodox, but alſo perfectly clear from even the Suſpicion of Novelty.

I ſhould be happy if I had none to fear but my Enemies, and no other hindrance to my Salvation but their Calumny; but Heloiſe, you make me trouble, your Letters declare to me that you are enſlaved to a fatal Paſſion; and yet if you cannot conquer quer it, you cannot be ſaved; and what part would you have me take in this Caſe? Would you have me ſtifle the Inſpirations of the Holy Ghoſt? Shall I, to ſooth you, dry up thoſe Tears which the Evil Spirit makes you ſhed: Shall this be the Fruit of my Meditations? No: let us be more firm in our Reſolutions; we have not retired but in order to lament our Sins, and to gain Heaven; let us then reſign ourſelves to God with all our Heart.

I know every thing in the beginning is difficult, but it is glorious to undertake the beginning of a great Action, and that Glory increaſes proportionably, as the Difficulties are more conſiderable. We ought upon this account to ſurmount bravely all Obſtacles which might hinder us in the Practice of Chriſtian Virtue. In a Monaſtery Men are proved as Gold in the Furnace. No one can continue long there, unleſs he bear worthily the Yoke of our Lord.

ATTEMPT to break thoſe ſhameful Chains which bind you to the Fleſh, and if by the Aſſiſtance of Grace you are ſo happy as to accompliſh this, I entreat you to think of me in your Prayers. Endeavour with all your Strength to be the Pattern of a perfect Chriſtian; it is difficult, I confeſs, but not impoſſible; and I expect this beautiful Triumph from your teachable Diſpoſition. If your firſt Endeavours prove weak, give not yourſelf up to Deſpair; that would be Cowardice; beſides, I would have you informed, that you muſt neceſſarily take great Pains, becauſe you ſtrive to conquer a terrible Enemy, to extinguiſh raging Fire, and to reduce to Subjection your deareſt Affections; you muſt fight againſt your own Deſires, be not therefore preſs'd down with the Weight of your corrupt Nature. You have to do with a cunning Adverſary, who will uſe all means to ſeduce you; be always upon your Guard. While we live we are expoſed to Temptations; this made a great Saint ſay, that the whole Life of Man was a Temptation; the Devil, who never ſleeps, walks continually around us, in order to ſurprize us on ſome unguarded ſide, and enters into our Soul to deſtroy it.

HOWEVER Perfect any one may be, yet he may fall into Temptations, and

perhaps into ſuch as may be uſeful. Nor is it wonderful that Man ſhould never be exempt from them, becauſe he always hath in himſelf their Source, Concupiſcence; ſcarce are we delivered from one Temptation, but another attacks us. Such is the Lot of the Poſterity of Adam, that they ſhould always have ſomething to ſuffer, becauſe they have forfeited their Primitive Happineſs. We vainly flatter our ſelves that we ſhall conquer Temptations by flying; if we join not Patience and Humility, we ſhall torment our ſelves to no purpoſe. We ſhall more certainly compaſs our End by imploring God's Aſſiſtance, than by uſing any Means drawn from our ſelves.

BE conſtant, Heloiſe, truſt in God, and you will fall into few Temptations; whenever they ſhall come, ſtifle them in their Birth; let them not take Root in your Heart. Apply Remedies to a Diſeaſe, ſaid an Ancient, in its Beginning, for when it hath gain'd Strength, Medicines will be unavailable; Temptations have their Degrees, they are at firſt meer Thoughts, and do not appear dangerous; the Imagination receives them without any Fears; a Pleaſure is form'd out of them, we pauſe upon it, and at laſt we yield to it.

Do you now, Heloiſe, applaud my Deſign of making you walk in the Steps of the Saints! Do my Words give you any Reliſh for Penitence? Have you not Remorſe for your Wanderings, and do you not wiſh you could, like Magdalen, waſh our Saviour's Feet with your Tears? If you have not yet theſe ardent Emotions, pray that he would inſpire them. I ſhall never ceaſe to recommend you in my Prayers, and always beſeech him to aſſiſt you in your Deſign of dying holily. You have quitted the World, and what Object was worthy to detain you there? Lift up your Eyes always to him to whom you have conſecrated the reſt of your Days. Life upon this Earth is Miſery. The very Neceſſities to which our Body is ſubject here, are matter of Affliction to a Saint. Lord, ſaid the Royal Prophet, deliver me from my Neceſſities! They are wretched who do not know themſelves for ſuch, and yet they are more wretched who know their Miſery, and do not hate the Corruption of the Age. What Fools are Men to engage themthemſelves to Earthly Things! They will be undeceived one Day, and will know but too late how much they have been to blame in loving ſuch falſe Good. Perſons truly Pious are not thus miſtaken, they are diſengaged from all ſenſual Pleaſures, and raiſe their Deſires to Heaven. Begin, Heloiſe; put your Deſign in Execution without delay; you have yet time enough to work out your Salvation. Love Chriſt, and deſpiſe yourſelf for his ſake. He would poſſeſs your Heart, and be the ſole Object of your Sighs and Tears; ſeek for no Comfort but in him. If you do not free yourſelf from me, you will fall with me; but if you quit me, and give up your ſelf to him, you will be ſtedfaſt and immoveable. If you force the Lord to forſake you, you will fall into Diſtreſs; but if you be ever faithful to him, you will be always in Joy. Magdalen wept, as thinking the Lord had forſaken her; but Martha ſaid, See the Lord calls you; Be diligent in your Duty, and obey faithfully the Motions of his Grace, and Jeſus will remain always with you.

ATTEND, Heloiſe, to ſome Inſtructions I have to give you: You are at the Head of a Society, and you know there is this Difference between thoſe who lead a private Life, and ſuch as are charged with the Conduct of others; that the firſt need only labour for their own Sanctification, and in acquitting themſelves of their Duties are not obliged to practiſe all the Virtues in ſuch an apparent manner; whereas they who have the Conduct of others entruſted to them, ought by their Example to engage them to do all the good they are capable of in their Condition. I beſeech you to attend to this Truth, and ſo to follow it, as that your whole Life may be a perfect Model of that of a religious Recluſe.

God, who heartily deſires our Salvation, hath made all the Means of it eaſie to us. In the Old Teſtament he hath written in the Tables of the Law what he requires of us, that we might not be bewilder'd in ſeeking after his Will. In the New Teſtament he hath written that Law of Grace in our Hearts, to the intent that it might be always preſent with us; and knowing the Weakneſs and Incapacity of our Nature, he hath given us Grace to perform his Will; and as this were not enough, he hath hath at all Times, in all States of the Church, raiſed up Men, who by their exemplary Life might excite others to their Duty. To effect this, he hath choſen Perſons of every Age, Sex, and Condition. Strive now to unite in yourſelf all thoſe Virtues which have been ſcatter'd in theſe different States. Have the Purity of Virgins, the Auſterity of Anchorites, the Zeal of Paſtors and Biſhops, and the Conſtancy of Martyrs. Be exact in the Courſe of your whole Life to fulfil the Duties of a holy and enlightned Superior, and then Death, which is commonly conſidered as terrible, will appear agreeable to you.

THE Death of his Saints, ſays the Prophet, is precious in the Sight of the Lord. Nor is it difficult to comprehend why their Death ſhould have this Advantage over that of Sinners. I have remarked three Things which might have given the Prophet an occaſion of ſpeaking thus. Firſt, their Reſignation to the Will of God. Secondly, the Continuation of their good Works. And laſtly, the Triumph they gain over the Devil.

A Saint who has accuſtomed himſelf to ſubmit to the Will of God, yields to Death with-without Reluctance. He waits with Joy (says St. Gregory) for the Judge who is to reward him, he fears not to quit this miserable mortal Life, in order to begin an immortal happy one. It is not so with the Sinner, says the same Father; he fears, and with Reason, he trembles at the Approach of the least Sickness; Death is terrible to him, because he cannot bear the Presence of an offended Judge, and having so often abused the Grace of God, he sees no Way to avoid the Punishment due to his Sins.

THE Saints have besides this Advantage over Sinners, that having made Works of Piety familiar to them during their Life, they exercise them without Trouble, and having gain'd new Strength against the Devil every time they overcame him, they will find themselves in a Condition at the Hour of Death to obtain that Victory over him, on which depends all Eternity, and the blessed Union of their Souls with their Creator.

I hope, Heloise, that after having deplored the Irregularities of your past Life, you will die (as the Prophet pray'd) the Death of the Righteous. Ah how few are there who make their End after this Manner?

Digitized by Google

Manner? And why? It is becauſe there are ſo few who love the Croſs of Chriſt. Every one would be ſaved, but few will uſe thoſe Means which Religion preſcribes: And yet we can be ſaved by nothing but the Croſs, why then do we refuſe to bear it? Hath not our Saviour bore it before us, and died for us, to the end that we might alſo bear it, and deſire to die alſo? All the Saints have been afflicted, and our Saviour himſelf did not paſs one Hour of his Life without ſome Sorrow. Hope not therefore to be exempted from Sufferings. The Croſs, Heloiſe, is always at Hand, but take Care that you do not bear it with Regret, for by ſo doing you will make it more heavy, and you will be oppreſs'd by it unprofitably. On the contrary, if you bear it with Affection and Courage, all your Sufferings will create in you a holy Confidence, whereby you will find Comfort in God. Hear our Saviour, who ſays, My Child renounce yourſelf, take up your Croſs and follow me. Oh Heloiſe! do you doubt? Is not your Soul raviſh'd at ſo ſaving a Command? Are you deaf to his Voice? Are you inſenſible to

Words

Words ſo full of Kindneſs? Beware, Heloiſe, of refuſing a Husband who demands you, and is more to be fear'd, if you ſlight his Affection, than any profane Lover. Provok'd at your Contempt and Ingratitude, he will turn his Love into Anger, and make you feel his Vengeance. How will you ſuſtain his Preſence, when you ſhall ſtand before his Tribunal? He will reproach you for having deſpiſed his Grace; he will repreſent to you his Sufferings for you. What Anſwer can you make? He will then be implacable. He will ſay to you, Go proud Creature, dwell in everlaſting Flames: I ſeparated you from the World to purify you in Solitude, and you did not ſecond my Deſign. I endeavoured to ſave you, and you took Pains to deſtroy yourſelf: Go, Wretch, and take the Portion of the Reprobates.

O H, Heloiſe, prevent theſe terrible Words, and avoid by a holy Courſe the Puniſhment prepared for Sinners. I dare not give you a Deſcription of thoſe dreadful Torments which are the Conſequences of a Life of Guilt. I am filled with Horror, when they offer themſelves to my Imaginamagination: And yet, Heloiſe, I can conceive nothing which can reach the Tortures of the damned; the Fire which we ſee upon Earth, is but the Shadow of that which burns them; and without enumerating their endleſs Pains, the Loſs of God which they feel increaſes all their Torments. Can any One ſin who is perſwaded of this? My God! Can we dare to offend thee? Tho' the Riches of thy Mercy could not engage us to love thee, the Dread of being thrown into ſuch an Abyſs of Miſery ſhould reſtrain us from doing any thing which might diſpleaſe Thee!

I queſtion not, Heloiſe, but you will hereafter apply yourſelf in good Earneſt to the Buſineſs of your Salvation: This ought to be your whole Concern. Baniſh me therefore for ever from your Heart; 'tis the beſt Advice I can give you: For the Remembrance of a Perſon we have loved criminally cannot but be hurtful, whatever Advances we may have made in the Ways of Virtue. When you have extirpated your unhappy Inclination towards me, the Practice of every Virtue will become eaſie; and when at laſt your Life is con-conformable to that of Chriſt, Death will be deſirable to you. Your Soul will joyfully leave this Body, and direct its Flight to Heaven. Then you will appear with Confidence before your Saviour: You will not read Characters of your Reprobation written in the Book of Life; but you will hear your Saviour ſay, Come, partake of my Glory, and enjoy the eternal Reward I have appointed for thoſe Virtues you have practiſed.

FAREWELL, Heloiſe. This is the laſt Advice of your dear Abelard; this laſt Time, let me perſwade you to follow the holy Rules of the Goſpel. Heaven grant that your Heart, once ſo ſenſible of my Love, may now yield to be directed by my Zeal! May the Idea of your loving Abelard, always preſent to your Mind, be now changed into the Image of Abelard, truly Penitent; and may you ſhed as many Tears for your Salvation, as you have done during the Courſe of our Misfortunes!
